MONTH OF BEAUTY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. B. H.

Sweet month of beauty, flower and song,
Of verdant fields and brilliant skies,
A thousand sweets to thee belong,
A thousand varying, changeful dyes.

Each bush and hedge-row now is dressed
In richest green, with blooming flower,
Where late were naught but naked stalks
Proclaiming Winter's sovereign power.

In golden showers the buttercups
Star all the plain and crown the hill;
While roses ope their crimson hearts,
And all the air with fragrance fill.

At early dawn the robin's song
With clouds of music fills the air—
All pleasant sights and sounds belong
To thee, and charm us everywhere.

At evening pipes the whippoorwill
In lonely grounds his mournful strain;
Lone watcher, through the silent night
He echoes still the sad refrain.

The firefly lights his tiny lamp,
Which brightest shines in darkest night,
E'en as our earthly treasures seem
The brightest when they've taken flight.

In the hot air of sultry noon
The clover blossom bends its head;
And in oppressive, sweet perfume,
Its fragrant breath around is shed.

The length'ning days too short appear
For all the beauties of our clime:
The shortened nights seem far too long
To hide the glories of the time.

Sweet June! 'tis well thy reign is short—
For, were our earth thus ever bright,
We should be loth to leave such joys
For even Heaven's purer light.

CHAPTER XXII—CONTINUED.

'Twas the hour of midnight, and a heavy storm beat down upon the roof of the mansion of Ferdinand. Every soul in the house slept soundly, save one. Even Lord Arthur slept soundly on this night, which was to bring terror to his guilty soul and to every other soul that slept in the grand old house.

Hark! what sound is that? Surely, it's a soft step, almost like that of a child. It comes up the blue staircase. Even in the darkness can be seen the dim outlines of a female form, robed in flowing white. See! it glides nearer and nearer up to the blue hall, like the shadow of a woman's ghost. The dim white figure halts outside a door. Not a sound is heard, yet the figure has vanished. Where has it gone?

There she goes, gliding into that apartment, where a light burns dimly. We see her in the full blaze of the light, which she has turned on noiselessly. It is no shadow, no spectre; but Lady Violet herself. See how her eyes glare upon the lace curtains surrounding the couch opposite to where she stands. Nearer and nearer she approaches. She is holding the curtains apart at the foot of the bed. The low breathing of the sleeper is distinctly heard. The light is bright within, and Lady Ferdinand glides to the side of the couch facing the light, which strikes brilliantly upon the curtains that the white hands draw apart. Still the sleeper is undisturbed. With a face as white as that of the dead, with her large blue eyes almost starting from their sockets, she gazes upon the sleeping criminal lying upon his couch, disrobed, with his neck bare, and the fatal mark of the murderer, hung by the rope, staring her in the face—with the horrible black and purple mark around his neck, made still more horrible by the light now falling upon it.

With a piercing shriek, which rang from room to room and startled the sleepers from their beds, Lady Ferdinand sprang upon her husband's body, and dug her nails deep into his blackened neck, as she screamed and screamed:

"Murderer! murderer! murderer!"

Lord Ferdinand, horrified, used all the energy which at that moment he possessed to unfasten her fingers from his throat, from which the blood flowed out in streams, her long sharp nails had made.

Footsteps struck a chill to the murderer's heart; and in fear of being discovered with his marked and bleeding throat, he thrust his wife down upon the bed, and strained every nerve to hold her there with his knee, while he wiped the blood from his neck, and tied his handkerchief around it. He had no sooner done so, than Lady Ferdinand got free, and her screams, once more echoing through the mansion, brought the frightened household to the spot.

"Break the door down!" they shouted.

Lord Ferdinand heard the threat, and rushing to the door, half dressed and trembling, said:

"I'll open it."

But Lady Ferdinand's cries of "Murder!" as she rushed wildly around the room, bewildered him, and the impatient servants no longer waited, but together, with one bound against the lock of the old oaken door, they burst it open, and rushed into the room.

Where was Lord Ferdinand? Crouched with terror, shivering and shaking with fear, behind a lounge, which he held to hide the terrible sight before him.

"Take care!" he cried. "My wife has gone mad! She is raving maniac! Fly to her! Quick! for your lives!"

Lord Ferdinand's words could not be doubted. Madly the unfortunate Violet dashed her head against the wall, and tore her hair by handfuls from her head, while shriek after shriek issued from her foaming mouth.

The servants stood aghast for a while,

Early the next morning, bound hand and foot, in a covered carriage, followed by two physicians, was the once lovely Lady Violet Ferdinand borne to the private Lunatic Asylum at Peckham Rye.

CHAPTER XXIII.
THE ADVERTISEMENT.

Lady Vanderbuilt was seated in her dressing-room. She was evidently suffering from some anxiety of mind. Her fair face was partly hid in her tiny foot, and ever and anon cast her eyes on the small gold watch, inlaid with precious stones, which lay on the table at her side.

Footsteps were now heard hurriedly approaching along the corridor towards Lady Vanderbuilt's room, and Lord Chester rushed into her presence with a startling expression upon his pale face.

"What's the matter, my lord?" exclaimed the Countess in alarm, starting to her feet.

"Oh, terrible, terrible, terrible!" cried the Earl. "Lady Ferdinand is gone mad, and is now a raving maniac in the lunatic asylum!"

"My God!" And Lady Vanderbuilt dropped into her chair, and to all appearances fainted.

"Oh, fool that I am!" cried the Earl. "I was too sudden. I ought to have known better." But he applied some restoratives, and the Countess very soon recovered. "Pardon me, my love," said the old Earl; "I did not intend to be so abrupt. I have been always deeply interested in the adopted daughter of my late friend Ferdinand, and I am more deeply grieved to hear of her unfortunate fate than I would have been to hear of her death."

"You are right, my lord—better death than madness. But I believe her husband has been the cause. In fact, my lord, I am positive; for the poor darling for these five years has been failing daily, and she confided to me, upon our last visit, things which almost made my hair stand on end. Indeed, I really feared she was becoming insane. I think, my lord," she continued, "it would be policy, as you are so deeply interested in this affair, for you to have an interview with the late Lord Ferdinand's lawyers, and to inquire more particularly into her husband's life. By paying well, you will doubtless succeed. You will be surprised when I inform you that the dear unfortunate told me she feared Lord Ferdinand had a horrible secret hid in his own breast, and it was this fear, I think, my lord, added to his neglect and cruelty, that drove her mad. I think the world ought to know a little more of this man, who so suddenly appeared as Lord Arthur Ferdinand. Although he mixes publicly in the highest society, yet Lady Ferdinand said, with her own lips, that he was a seducer, gambler, and a drunkard; and in my opinion, my lord, he deserves public exposure and the scorn of all respectable society."

"I think the same," answered the Earl. "I will at once set to work, and pay a visit to his lawyers."

"Do, my lord: for I loved sweet Violet, and shall never rest until the author of her misery has his punishment."

The Earl of Chester had scarcely departed when Thomas Harkaway appeared, like some sudden apparition.

"My darling!" she cried, "oh, how my heart has throbbed for you." And she returned his loving caress.

"Lady Ferdinand has been taken to the Peckham Rye lunatic asylum," he whispered in a low, sad voice.

"Hush! I know all about it. I won't hear any more. You know I hate her and them," she answered, shuddering.

"Pardon my emotions," she went on, changing the subject. "I have put the Earl up for the lawyers. Keep your spies well on guard—spare no money. I long to see him thrust from his high estate. He has reveled in luxury and debauchery long enough. It is time for him to fall."

We shall leave the lovers their hours of happiness, while we enter a private gambling-saloon in the vicinity of St. James' square. The scene I am about to picture took place some three weeks after the unfortunate Violet was carried to the lunatic asylum.

A mixture of ruined noblemen, also noblemen moving amongst the noblest, rich merchants and gamblers of renown, with Lord Arthur Ferdinand in their midst, drinking, gambling and smoking. In the farther corner of the room a man of a fine, aristocratic appearance sat reading a newspaper, as he slowly puffed from between his lips the smoke of a delicious cigar. Lord Arthur Ferdinand was also smoking. He lounged in a chair near the fire, and seemed to be in a brown study, as his eyes were fixed on the red blaze before him.

He is much changed since the insanity of his wife. As he gazes into the fire there is a vacant look in his eyes, and there is a dark circle around them—a sign his nights are troubled and wakeful.

"Two crimes to answer for. One I murdered; the other I have driven mad."

These were the words which he muttered as he emptied a glass filled with brandy, and laid it on the table beside him.

"By Jove! here's a thousand pounds for some lucky fellow," suddenly exclaimed the aristocratic gentleman who stood at the farther end of the apartment, smoking his cigar and reading The Evening News. Every gambler except Lord Ferdinand took an interest in those simple words, and begged to know their meaning.

"It's a copy from an American paper," said the reader.

The word American struck upon the ears of Lord Ferdinand. He listened, indifferently at first:

"'One thousand pounds in gold will be paid to any party or person who can give any clue to the whereabouts of a man who escaped this country some six or seven years ago. This man was hung by the lynch-law for murdering his wife. It was afterwards discovered that the man had been resuscitated by the students of the college, and had made his way to England. His name was Richard Harkaway, but he is now, doubtless, passing under an alias.'"

Lord Arthur Ferdinand gnashed his teeth, and drank down another glass of brandy, but it did not stop the shaking of his limbs, nor the chattering of his teeth. He grasped the table to try to steady himself, while he cursed the very hour he was born. The crowd of gamblers flocked around the reader, each one reading in turn.

"Say, Ferdinand, have you got the mumps? Come here, old fellow," said the reader of the paper.

Lord Ferdinand dropped the glass of brandy he was holding to his lips as the man spoke, and it fell into fragments upon the marble hearth, to the enjoyment of all present.

"Oh, let him alone. He has been drinking too hard. You'll be in for the blue devils if you don't look out, Ferdinand, my boy," cried one of his clique.

Lord Ferdinand jumped up from his chair, and said in a voice which seemed unearthly:

"I have got the blue devils already!" And, banging open the door, he rushed from the house.

"I shouldn't wonder but Ferdinand is going to have a fit of delirium tremens," remarked one of the party. "He has drunk like Satan since his wife went mad."

"I shouldn't wonder. It would drive me mad," put in a third.

As the party thus conversed, with the reader of the advertisement in the centre, a stranger entered the room. He passed his card of admittance to the crowd of gamblers, took a seat at the card-table, and commenced shuffling the cards.

"Friends, who was that gent who nearly knocked me down in the hall? Was he a lunatic?" the stranger asked as he threw the cards around the table.

"You are very near it, sir," replied one of the gamblers, "for he is the husband of one."

"What's his name?" asked the stranger, turning quickly and facing them, to their astonishment.

"That gentleman is Lord Arthur Ferdinand, of Ferdinand mansion; and a more generous fellow never entered these doors," said the newspaper reader proudly, and rather haughtily, too, as he turned his back on the questioner.

"Well, gentlemen, I should have taken the fellow for a murderer instead of a nobleman," and he began laying out his cards, as if to play a game of whist.

"This is a cool individual!" remarked one of the gamblers. "Let us ask him who he is." And, politely taking his seat at the opposite table facing the stranger, he said: "Excuse me, my friend, we know all about Lord Ferdinand."

The stranger interrupted him quickly with:

"Tell me where he was born, then?"

"Friends," said the gambler, "where was Lord Ferdinand born?"

They all thought he was an Englishman. The stranger burst out laughing heartily:

"You know all about him, you do, don't you? Why, the moment my eyes caught sight of him in the hall, I said to myself—That's an American maniac; and if he's not an American, born and bred, I'll eat these cards."

One of those who had remained silent during this scene now spoke up:

"Yes; I believe he's an American. I heard a party last week discussing the same question, and they came to the conclusion that he was an American."

"I guess that's queer," said the stranger.

"I guess you are an American, by your language," said an observer.

"I am, sir, and I am not ashamed of it, because I have never done anything to disgrace my country; and I swear that that fellow I met in the hall would like to murder somebody, if he hasn't already committed murder. But I am not that man." And he rose from his seat and bowed, then turned to his cards and commenced playing all by himself again. The waiter placed wine and glasses by his side.

"Knock off their necks, fill the glasses and pass round. Your health, friends! Ah, that's good!" he said, smacking his lips. "Hand me The Evening News. What's the principal news this evening, friends?" turning the paper in his hands over and over, and feeling in all his pockets as if for his spectacles.

"A thousand pounds reward for the capture of a runaway criminal from your own country. There's a chance for you, sir," said one of the clique, "especially as you can read a man's face so well."

"What! what!" cried the stranger. "Bless my heart! you don't say so?" And, pushing the paper towards them, he insisted upon their reading it to him, as he couldn't find his eye-glasses anywhere. "I guess I am an old fool, after all, and have let some thieves walk off with my specs."

He drew his chair closer to the gamblers, and looked at each face, and waited patiently, with his legs crossed and his cigar in his mouth, for the reading of the advertisement.

"Well," said he, after it had been read to him, "I guess I'll try and earn those thousand pounds."

"Whom do you intend to begin with?" said a voice.

"Why, with the man I met in the hall, to be sure; for if his face was not the face of a wretch that would be guilty of any crime—aye, even murder—I'll be hanged."

"Why, man, you surely are a detective. But, detective or not, you'll win no thousand pounds on Lord Arthur Ferdinand."

"Lord Arthur Ferdinand?" repeated the stranger. "Could any of you gentlemen inform me how long this gent has borne the title of Lord Arthur Ferdinand?"

"Good! good! He is earnest about it," they all laughed.

But the gentleman in the corner answered him:

"The late Lord Ferdinand died between six and seven years ago, when his nephew Arthur took possession of his uncle's title and estates."

"Six or seven years ago!" muttered the stranger. "Six or seven years ago! Well, that's strange!" said the stranger, getting up. "By Jove! it's time for me to go," and, taking up his hat and cane, he shook hands with all present, and departed.

One of the gamblers, silent and more observing than the rest, remarked as the door closed upon the departing stranger:

"I have a strong suspicion that that American stranger is a private detective!"

In old London, in one of the narrowest and darkest streets, the late and the pr-sent Lord Arthur Ferdinand's lawyer kept his office.

"Sir, your card," said the lawyer, busy at his desk, but aware that somebody had entered his room.

"If it's not too much trouble to look at me," said his visitor serenely, "you won't need a card."

The lawyer raised his spectacles and looked.

"The Earl of Chester!" cried the astonished attorney, and he placed at his visitor's command the best chair in his office. "For what am I honored for this call, my lord?"

The Earl of Chester seated himself, and beckoned the lawyer to sit near him.

"Do you know anything of the man who now bears the title of Lord Arthur Ferdinand?"

"I do not understand you, my lord."

"I mean of his previous life, before he inherited his present wealth and title."

"All I know is, my lord, that he is the son of the late Lord Ferdinand's sister, who eloped with the father of the present lord."

"Great Heavens!" cried the Earl. "Have you read The Evening News to-day?"

"No; I have not, my lord."

"Read that advertisement, then, and tell me what you can make of it."

The lawyer read and reread the advertisement before he handed it back.

"My lord, I am sure, I know not what to think; and yet, strange that the name should be like his father's, and stranger still that the description of this man is not in the advertisement. But it is impossible for me to think that Lord Arthur Ferdinand is the Richard Harkaway stated here," stammered the lawyer.

"Why are you so agitated, Mr. Quick?"

"I am astounded, my lord, in imagining that disgrace and shame should ever touch the spotless name of Ferdinand."

"You are no more astounded than I, sir. The late Lord Ferdinand and I were bosom friends, and it's my duty, sir, to see that his name is not disgraced—that no usurper nor murderer stands in his place. This present lord has abused his wife, forsaken and neglected her, and at last drives her mad. Do you know, sir, that this man is also subject to some crazy fits? His wife told me herself. And again, sir, he has never been seen without that tie, sir, around his neck. He made it the fashion; but, sir, that fashion is dying out, yet he still wears it. I thought from the first there was something mysterious about him, and I would say it, sir, to his face."

The speaker had scarcely ceased when he and the lawyer were startled by a rustling noise at the door. It was thrown open, and the very object of their conversation stood, pale and trembling, before them. The lawyer instantly gave his chair to him.

"What is the matter, my lord? You seem to be very much alarmed at something," said the Earl in a sarcastic tone.

The tone stabbed Lord Ferdinand to the heart, and roused him to the danger of his position; so he quietly seated himself, and merely bowed to the Earl as he coolly remarked:

"My business, my lord, is with Lawyer Quick."

"As the forty years' bosom friend of the late Lord Ferdinand, permit me to say I know your business here. This advertisement brought you here, and also myself."

And, handing him the advertisement cut from the paper, the Earl began arranging some important memoranda, which he drew forth from his pocket-book. Lord Ferdinand felt it would be but of little avail to anger the Earl. Better to make him his friend than his enemy, if possible. Bending his head lower over the advertisement, he seemed to be reading.

"When you inherited your present name and title, the form you went through, published in all the London papers, ran thus: 'Arthur Ferdinand, the last heir of Ferdinand, came into his inheritance on the death of his uncle, Arthur Ferdinand, late Lord of Ferdinand.' Neither your father's name nor your own, Richard Harkaway, ever appeared upon the papers. What motive had you for withholding your real name, giving people the impression you had never borne any but Arthur Ferdinand? The very fact of your withholding it, then, will bring upon you now suspicions when once the news flies round that your name is Richard Harkaway, and you, according to this advertisement, have only been in England between six and seven years."

Lord Ferdinand started as the truth of the Earl's remarks struck him.

"You are right, my lord," he replied. "I followed my own inclinations, I should not have withheld my name. But I could not resist my dying uncle's last request, which was never to acknowledge the name of my father or my own. There was a horrible mystery connected with my father, which the former never forgave; and in forgiving me it was on condition that I never acknowledge the name of Richard Harkaway."

"So far, my lord," said the lawyer, "Lord Ferdinand speaks the truth; for I have the will, which vouches for it."

"So far!" exclaimed Lord Ferdinand, scowling at the lawyer. "Do you insinuate, sir, that I am a liar?"

"By no means, my lord," replied the lawyer, as haughtily as he had been addressed. "I never insinuate. What I mean, I say—please—not please—whether it is black or white. And I say again—so far, you have spoken the truth."

"Am I to understand, then, my lord," said the Earl, "that you are not the Richard Harkaway to whom this advertisement alludes?"

"Sir, I consider that what right do you question me? Were you a younger man, I would take a different way to reply to your insult."

"If you are, sir, or if you are not, the Richard Harkaway that's advertised for, you will be glad, perhaps, to find a friend, when too late to save you from the avalanche of disgrace which must eventually fall. One suspicion from Lord Vanderbuilt would hiss you from society."

Lord Ferdinand turned white, and stood up before the Earl of Chester, calm and dignified.

"Lord Vanderbuilt and Mr. Quick, in the presence of you both and in the sight of Heaven, I am not that man!" said the villain. "And my anxiety and fear have been aroused and excited merely by the idea that my name will be mixed up with this affair in the advertisement."

"You speak like an honest man, Lord Ferdinand, and I would feign believe what you have stated. For the sake of your dead uncle and the demented Violet, I would spare no expense to track the Richard Harkaway of the advertisement."

"This Earl may be my ruin," thought Lord Ferdinand. "Can it be that my hellish half-brother has started this advertisement out of revenge because I accused him of being Lady Vanderbuilt's lover? No, no! He would not dare. That advertisement is genuine. But to acknowledge myself a murderer would be death. I have it! I'll leave the country." He turned to the lawyer, saying:

"I suppose, my friends—as I must call you so, considering the interest you so kindly take in my welfare—you wish me to take my oath upon the Bible? If it will be any satisfaction to you, I will not hesitate to take it."

"No; there is a more simple proof that you can give us. It will clear you in the eyes of the world."

"Indeed, my lord," replied Lord Ferdinand, little dreaming what the proof could be, "I shall be willing to prove it, whatever way you please."

"My lord," said the lawyer, "your willingness to oblige us assures us of your innocence."

Lord Ferdinand bowed. The Earl of Chester hesitated. Then, taking the advertisement, he laid his hand upon it, and said in most serious voice:

"My lord Ferdinand, this advertisement says that the murderer Richard Harkaway was hung by the neck, and afterward resuscitated. If you are that man, the mark of the rope will still be visible. My lord, oblige me by taking off that handkerchief and to us expose your throat."

Had a thunderbolt fallen upon Lord Ferdinand, he could not have been more startled. With a face aghast with fear, he clutched the handkerchief as if he feared one of the twain would spring upon him and tear it from his neck. As he did so, he backed to the door, without a word gave one bound, and was gone.

"It is the man!" exclaimed the Earl.

"Amen!" said the lawyer, "amen!"

It was three o'clock on the following morning, and darkness covered the city of London. A man with a long beard and cloak and a stooping gait issued from Ferdinand mansion, and hurried away. Behind him, in the distance, a shadow followed his steps.

"Once in Paris," thought the man with the stooping gait, "I am free again. I can change my name, wear a disguise, and who would know me then?"

On, on, he trudged, the passers-by pitying the poor, wrapped-up old man, as they thought.

"How far is it to the terminus?" the man asked of a passer-by.

"Three o'clock!" was the reply.

"What is the hour the train leaves to meet the boat?"

"Half-past three o'clock."

"I must hurry, I must hurry," thought the wrapped-up, long-bearded, old man.

"I must hurry, I must hurry," thought the Shadow. Arrived at last, the man wrapped up bought his ticket and entered a second-class carriage.

"I am safe now," said he. "No one can find me here," and he hugged the cloak more closely around him, chuckled inwardly, and thought: "A snap for the advertisement!" when, to his horror, as he raised his eyes, a man stood before him with a pistol leveled at his brain.

"You are my prisoner, Richard Harkaway! Back to London, or I'll scatter your brains as you scattered the brains of Hester Bertram on the Broken Rock." The man who thus spoke clutched the man in the cloak by the wrist with an iron grip. "Follow me!"

And, dragging him along, back into the streets of London, he shook him off from his grasp, saying:

"Go, murderer! you are free. But back to your palace. Hold your head high, and deny the truth. Do you not see, fool, your flight would condemn you? Away!"

The man with the long beard turned quickly round to see which way the other had taken, but he looked in vain. Like a shadow he had stood before him, and like a shadow he had vanished.

CHAPTER XXIV.
FERRETED OUT OF SOCIETY.

The advertisement did its work; the spies of Lady Vanderbuilt did their work; and the names of Arthur Ferdinand and Richard Harkaway were on every tongue. Had the advertisement alone been used to drive Lord Ferdinand out of society, it would have failed; for only three persons besides himself knew that his name was Richard Harkaway before he became heir to Ferdinand. These were Lady Vanderbuilt, who, in various disguises, roused those suspicions which soon became the city talk. Those who had regarded him simply as a dangerous man now turned their backs upon him entirely, while those of higher grade with whom he had mingled now passed him by unnoticed. There was but one thing he still lived for—Lady Vanderbuilt's smile; for though when by her husband's side she frowned, yet in her lonely drives and in her equestrian exercises, followed only by her footman, she smiled upon him the same smile, which ever cast over him its magnetic influence.

Thus year after year passed on, and lower and lower Lord Ferdinand fell. The grand old mansion of Ferdinand looked dark, dingy, and neglected. He had returned as his Shadow had bidden, but it was seldom there. About once a week he visited it, and dined alone with his daughter, who at this time had arrived at her fifteenth year.

She grew tall and graceful, and more and more like her father; but there was a settled sadness in the young girl's face, and it won the sympathies of those with whom she came in contact. It was the memory of her mad mother, the love she bore the woman she had been taught to believe was her parent, that made her sad. Once every two weeks had the young Violet, accompanied by Miss Rowland, visited the asylum during all these years. But, alas! they had never been recognized by the poor maniac. In their presence she would stand with her hands folded across her breast, and gaze first at one, and then at the other. She would then glide towards them, fall at their feet, and sob like a child. But this was not the gentle way in which she received all visitors, for sometimes she was dangerous to approach. Still, within the last few years, a great change for the better had taken place, and the daughter hoped for nothing but the recovery of her maniac mother, and many times had Miss Rowland found the young girl on her knees, weeping and praying for her supposed mother. But from her father she still shrank, and Lord Ferdinand had long since abandoned the hope of making friends with his daughter; for, even when he seemed ill and needed comfort, she turned away from him without pity.

As years passed, the immense wealth Lord Ferdinand inherited was wellnigh spent. He thoughtlessly gambled his means away, and lived only in a whirl of intoxication. He could not bear the guilty thoughts, the horrible sights, the mad yells of his maniac wife, which haunted him when sober. The wretch refused even to pay the yearly sum to the asylum for the poor insane Violet's comfort.

"Put her where you pl ase," he said to the superintendent, banging his fist upon the table. "I have paid a fortune for her already, and I'll pay no more."

"Then she will have to go to the free asylum," the superintendent replied, taking his hat, and walking out of the apartment.

"All right," thought his lordship. "I am in debt now, head-and-heels. I shall be turned out of my mansion myself next."

He was right. He had already mortgaged his estate, and as time passed, and he could not pay the interest, a stranger, supposed to be a rising merchant, bought up all his debts, paid the interest on the mortgage, took possession of the once grand old mansion of Ferdinand, and drove its once lord and master forth. The reader can imagine who the stranger was.

Miss Rowley had secured her thousand pounds during the illness of Lady Ferdinand, and put it away in a snug little bank for her old age. But the faithful housekeeper planned differently on finding that a new master was to take the old mansion, that Lord Ferdinand had become penniless, that all the household were discharged, that her mistress was in the free asylum, and that the daughter was homeless and penniless.

"Come, my dear Miss Violet, don't weep so," said Miss Rowland, "we have one friend left."

"Thank Heaven for that!" replied the young Violet. "Pray, who is it?"

"Lady Vanderbuilt, my dear."

"Lady Vanderbuilt!" exclaimed young Violet. "Oh, let us go at once. She will advise us. But, alas! she is so rich, so grand; and it is nearly two years since she came to see me. Maybe she will not receive us."

"Have no fear, my dear. Lady Vanderbuilt was the dearest friend of your mother, and I am sure she will prove her friendship now by befriending her child."

"O Rowley! if my poor mad mother only knew what a mother you have been to her desolate child, she would bless you every hour she lived."

And Lord Ferdinand's daughter—humble, without pride, and with a heart full of charity—flung herself upon the bosom of Miss Rowland. The old maid wept in silence, as the girl sobbed aloud.

"Come, Rowley, we'll start right off to Chester. I am sure she does not know the calamity which has stricken us."

"And who knows, Rowley, but she may do something for my beloved mother?"

"Who knows, my darling? Come."

At ten o'clock that night the train started for Chester, bearing with it Miss Rowland and her charge.

Lord and Lady Vanderbuilt were seated in their elegant boudoir, surrounded by every luxury. Although fifteen years had passed away, she was as beautiful as ever, while he had aged considerably. The gray silken hair was now white as the snow; but health and a long life showed itself in spite of the deep wrinkles which had gathered. He was now in his seventy-sixth year, and the wondrously lovely wife beside him in the very bloom of her womanhood.

What was Lady Vanderbuilt's thoughts as she gazed at the Earl, who was engaged with some important news he had just received?

"How long is he going to live, I wonder? Am I never to repay Edgar for these years of devotion by becoming his wife? How calm and peaceful has been the Earl's wedded life. If I am Vanderbuilt's rider, I am, a loving and devoted wife to him—in all seeming. But how faithfully have I hunted the murderer down! One step more, and Hester Bertram's vengeance is complete. I must drive him to St. Giles. When he is once there I shall be in the last act of my drama! I have made all suffer—aye, everyone—wife and children. Oh, how sweet is revenge!"

And as Lady Vanderbuilt thus pondered, the liveried servant entered and handed her a note; she cast her eyes over it, and as she did so she started, and her olive skin turned whiter, the brilliancy of her eyes brighter.

"Show the parties up here," she said, as she waved the servant off. "My lord," said the Countess, gliding to the Earl's side as of old, "the daughter of Lord Ferdinand desires to see me in private."

"Certainly," replied the Earl. "But you have no objection to my remaining to welcome them?"

"Certainly not."

"Miss Violet Ferdinand and Miss Rowland," announced the servant, and retired.

Both Lord and Lady Vanderbuilt rose to welcome them.

"My dear Miss Rowland," said Lady Vanderbuilt, "I am delighted to see you, and you too, Miss Violet," she added, taking her hand warmly.

"I will retire," said the Earl, after the visitors were seated, "trusting you do not intend to leave us for a while. You both look as if you need a change of air, and I beg you will consider yourselves welcome here."

"Oh, I am sure they will," replied the Countess, with a look that besought her husband to depart.

The Earl bowed and left the room. Lady Vanderbuilt gazed steadily upon her own unfortunate offspring. It had been two years since she had looked upon her.

"You have changed much, young Lady Ferdinand," she said kindly, drawing her towards her; "you are much taller, and more like your unfortunate father. I suppose, Violet, you have overcome your dislike for him?"

The Countess was eager for the girl's reply.

"I am sorry, my lady, but I have not overcome it," she said. "Nor can I account for this loathing, which seems born in me, and grows stronger and stronger."

"It is love for your mother," cried the Countess, impulsively drawing her to her heart. "Nature's instinct has filled you with hate for one who, by his crimes, drove your mother from you."

"TOO LATE."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

"When lips we have pressed have indifferent grown,
And the heart that has beat for us turns into stone—
Warm the one we have worshiped, in scorn passes by,
What remains for the wretched one, only to die?

"Go to him who has bought you! Curse the hour that we met!
But the past, gold can never buy—you cannot forget.
May your promises haunt you through long coming years,
And the vows you have broken ring in your ears!

"Farewell, and forever! I do not believe
You can wholly forget me. Dead, in my grave,
You'll remember your perjury, brood o'er my fate;
Tears will not avail you—too late, oh, too late!"

That this would have brought her, who wouldn't have thought?
So touching and sad—don't you think that it ought?
She tossed up her head, gave her sweet lips a pout,
And shouted like sixty: "Shut up, and clear out!"

CIRCUS LIFE IN THE OLD WORLD.

Phillip Astley, Equestrian and Founder of Astley's Amphitheatre.

The first equestrian performances ever seen in England, other than those of the itinerant exhibitors of performing horses, were given on the site of Dobney's Palace, at the back of Penton street, Islington. It was then a tea-garden and bowling-green, to which one Johnson, who obtained a lease of the premises in 1767, added such performances as then attracted seekers after amusement to Sadler's Wells. One Price, concerning whose antecedents the strictest research has failed to discover any information, gave equestrian performances at this place in 1770, and soon had a rival in one Sampson, who performed similar feats in a field behind the Old Hats.

About the same time, feats of horsemanship were exhibited in Lambeth, in a field near Halfpenny Hatch, which, it may be necessary to inform our readers, stood where a broad ditch, which then ran through the fields and market-gardens now covered by the streets between Westminster road and Blackfriars road, was crossed by a swivel bridge. There was a narrow pathway through the fields and gardens, for the privilege of using which a halfpenny was paid to the owners of a cottage near the bridge. In one of these fields Philip Astley—a great name in circus annals—formed his first ring with a rope and some stakes, going round with his hat after each performance to collect the loose halfpence of the admiring spectators.

This remarkable man was born in 1742, at Newcastle-under-Lyme, where his father carried on the business of a cabinet-maker. He received little or no education, and, after working a few years with his father, enlisted in a cavalry regiment. His imposing appearance, being over six feet in height, with the proportions of a Hercules and the voice of a Stentor, attracted attention to him; and his capture of a standard at Emsdorff made him one of the celebrities of his regiment. While serving in the army he learned some feats of horsemanship from an itinerant equestrian named Johnson—perhaps the man under whose management Price introduced equestrian performances at Sadler's Wells—and often exhibited them for the amusement of his comrades. On his discharge from the army, he was presented by General Elliott with a horse, and thereupon he bought another in Smithfield, and commenced those open-air performances in Lambeth which have already been noticed.

After a time, he built a rude circus upon a piece of ground near Westminster Bridge which had been used as a timber-yard, being the site of the theatre which has been known by his name for nearly a century. Only the seats were roofed over, the ring in which he performed being open to the air. One of his horses, which he had taught to perform a variety of tricks, he soon began to exhibit, at an earlier period of each day, in a large room in Piccadilly, where the entertainment was ched out with conjuring and ombres Chinoises—a kind of shadow pantomime.

Having saved some money out of the proceeds of these performances, Astley erected the Amphitheatre, which, in its early years, resembled the present circus in Holborn more than the building subsequently identified with the equestrian triumphs of Ducrow. Chinese shadows were still found attractive, it seems, for they constitute the first item in one of the programmes of 1780, in which year the Amphitheatre was opened. Then came feats of horsemanship by Griffin, Jones and Miller, the clown to the ring being Burt. Tumbling—"acrobatics" had not been extracted from the Greek dictionary in those days—by Nevil, Porter, Dawson, and Harmon fellow-ed; and it is worthy of remark that none of the circus performers of the last century seemed to have deemed it expedient to Italianize their names, or to assume fanciful appellations such as the Olympian Brothers, or the Marvels of Peru. After the tumbling, the feat of riding two and three horses at the same time was exhibited, the performer modestly concealing his name, which was probably Philip Astley. Next came "slack-rope vaulting in full swing, in different attitudes," tricks on chains and ladders, a burlesque equestrian act by the clown, and, lastly, "the amazing performance of men piled upon men, or the Egyptian pyramid."

Among the expedients to which Astley occasionally had recourse for the purpose of drawing a great concourse of people to the Surrey side of the Thames was a balloon ascent, an attraction frequently had recourse to in after times at Vauxhall, the Surrey Gardens, Cremorne, the Crystal Palace, and other places of popular resort. The balloon was dispatched from St. George's Fields on the 12th of March, 1784, "in the presence," says a writer in The Gentleman's Magazine, "of a greater number of spectators than were, perhaps, ever assembled together on any occasion;" and he adds that "many of the spectators will have reason to remember it; for a more ample harvest for the pickpockets never was presented. Some noblemen and gentlemen lost their watches, and many their purses. The balloon, launched about half-past one in the afternoon, was found at Faversham." This ascent took place within two months after that of the Montgolfière balloon at Lyons, and was, therefore, probably the first ever attempted in this country; while, by a strange coincidence, the first aerostatic experiment ever made in Scotland was made on the same day that Astley ascended, but about an hour later, from Heriot's Gardens, Edinburgh.

Horace Walpole writes, in allusion to a subsequent balloon ascent, and the excitement which it created in the public mind: "I doubt it has put young Astley's nose out of joint, who was going to fly under their Queen's protection, and expected to be Prime Minister, though he only ventured his neck by dancing a minuet on three horses at full gallop, and really in that attitude has as much grace as the Apollo Belvidere." The fame of Astley's receives an illustration from a sentence in Johnson's, that "Whitfield never drew as much attention as a mountebank does; he did not draw attention by doing better than others, but by doing what was strange. Were Astley to preach a sermon standing on his head or on a horse's back, he would collect a multitude to hear him; but no wise man would say he had made a better sermon for that."

Astley's Amphitheatre was destroyed by fire in 1794, to the serious loss of the proprietor, who was not insured; but such was his indomitable energy and enterprise that it was rebuilt in time to be opened on the 3rd of April in the following year. Meanwhile, in order to keep his company and stud employed, he converted the Lyceum into a circus, in conjunction with a partner named Handy.

Handy was still Astley's partner in 1796, when the advertisements announced "thirty-five new acts by Astley's new riders, and two performing mares." In addition to pony races, the performance of a clever little pony, only thirty inches in height, a performance on two ropes, and a novel act by a performer named Carr, who stood on his head in the centre of a globe, and ascended thirty feet, "turning round in a most surprising manner, like a boy's top." Later advertisements of this year describe the Amphitheatre as "under the patronage of the Duke of York," and announce the special engagements of two Cataract Indians—both children, of course, as the American Indians and Arabs who appear in the arena are always represented to be. These copper-colored gentlemen gave their war dance and tomahawk exercise, and performed feats of dexterity with bows and arrows. The only mention of equestrianism at this time is that "various equestrian and other exercises" will be given "by pupils of both the Astleys."

Astley's was burned again in 1803, when Mrs. Woodhams, the mother of Mrs. Astley, perished in the flames. Astley was again a heavy sufferer, the insurance not covering more than a fourth of the damage; but once more the building rose from its ruins, and it was again reopened in 1804. Astley, being occupied at the time with the construction of a circus in Paris, since known as Franconi's, the new Amphitheatre was leased by him to his son John Astley, with whom William Davis soon became associated as a partner.

In 1805, the Royal Circus having been destroyed by fire, Philip Astley leased the site of the Olympic Theatre from Lord Craven for a term of sixty-one years, at a yearly rental of one hundred pounds, with the stipulation that two thousand five hundred pounds should be expended in the erection of a theatre. It was an odd-shaped piece of ground, and required some contrivance to adapt it to the purpose; but Astley, who was his own architect and surveyor, and indeed his own builder—for he is said to have employed the workmen he required without the intervention of a master—overcame all difficulties with his usual energy and fertility of resource.

He bought the timbers of an old man-of-war, captured from the French, and with these built the framework of the theatre, a portion of which could, it was said, be seen at the rear of the boxes of the old Olympic Theatre before it was destroyed by fire. There was very little brickwork, the frame being covered externally with sheet iron, and internally with canvas. The arrangements of the auditorium were very similar to those of the provincial circuses of the present day; there was a single tier of boxes, a pit running round the circle, and a gallery behind, separated from the pit by a grating, which caused the "gods" to be likened to the wild beasts in Cross' Menagerie, Exeter Change. There was no orchestra, but a few musicians sat in a stage-box on each side. The chandelier was a present from the King. The building was licensed for music, dancing, and conversation performances, and called the Olympic Pavilion

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

W. Agnews, Akron, Newark.—There is a bet of $250 that Goldsmith Maid never trotted in a race, in harness, under 2:14½, it being a condition of the bet that the exact time was taken, and that there was no dispute or doubt regarding it."..... We have printed the terms of the bet, as you have given them. The party assuming the negative loses. Goldsmith Maid trotted in 2:14 at Mystic Park, Boston, last year (see Clipper Almanac); and he who bets that she did not is the only person, we think, that has ever questioned the accuracy of that time. It was, furthermore, a public race against Time, and as such is on record. 2. In your introductory there is a query as to her time in a "race against other horses." That does not appear as a condition of the bet, and it may be dismissed by saying that not one of her really best times has been made against "other horses." One time being about as many as can be brought against her. Thus, her 2:17 at Milwaukee, Sept. 5, 1870, and her 2:16¾ at Mystic Park, June 18, 1872, were made against "time" only, and her 2:10 and 2:16½ at East Saginaw, Mich., July 16, 1874, against Judge Fullerton only. Her subsequent 2:15¾, 2:14¾ and 2:14 have all been made against Time, which has once beaten her, viz., when she attempted to beat her own 2:14.

Hamlet.—If you care to do so for your own amusement, and can hire a theatre for the purpose, we would say Yes; but, if you intend to perform in such a manner as to advance-would give you any professional standing, we would say No. Young people anxious to enter the profession almost always commence at the wrong end. If you had had even practice before the regular stage, and a manager should ask you to act the character of Hamlet, you would probably be so nervous over it that you would require a long time for reflection before giving a definite answer, which probably would be a negative. If you wish to try the stage, act Bernardo instead of Hamlet, and see what success you meet with. If you appeared as an amateur, the newspapers would deal leniently with you; but if you claimed to be an actor, you would be criticised severely.

W. W. K., Baltimore.—1. Submit your composition to the editor of some paper in which matters of that kind is published. 2. There are rules of punctuation, and they may be found in every complete grammar. The art is essentially one of nice taste, however, and the bulk of punctuating is done by editors, compositors, and proof-readers, even by the best of writers who are not also printers. 3. From $30 upwards, according to locality. 4. Bay rum, well rubbed in; or anything that will promote heat. 5. There is no opening here at present. 6. It is subject to rule, and can only be acquired by study and practice, though natural gifts can render its acquirement easier.

J. B. W., Chicago.—To play with the highest hand of kings wins the money. The reason is that if B, who opened the pot with jacks and fives, and then threw away a jack instead of his unpaired card, had drawn a third five, he would probably have said nothing about his error, and have claimed the money, showing his three fives in proof that he had opened the pot on "jacks or better." A player who, like B, opens a pot on a hand less than one above a good hand as jacks, should be penalized in some stated amount, aside from his losses in the pool. This is often done by agreement.

C. H., Harlem.—A ship earns $1,000, which is to be divided in this way: The ship is to get one-half, the captain one-third, the first mate one-fourth, the second mate one-fifth, and the sailors one-sixth. What will be their equal proportions?..... If the captain, mates and crew are smart, they will be served first in the several sums of $3333⅓, $250, $200, and $166⅔, and thus defraud the ship of $450, as they will be but $267 left. The propounder of this problem seems to have but a faint idea of how many halves it takes to make a whole.

Fitzroy.—1. If you wish to insure sterling success in the future, study well one way to learn the profession, and that is to seek an engagement for general utility, and work your way up. 2. Neither of the theatres you name would be a good one for you to begin at, but you could probably get an engagement there, and, if you did, there would be no chance to rise, as all the positions above you are already filled by competent and experienced actors. It is immaterial where you start, so long as you develop talent.

C. B. H.—1. It is a matter of agreement, the game being irregular. We should want six points if we made a march and under such circumstances. 3. It is customary to combine the two rivers named in the case stated, the Mississippi's length 4,300 miles. The Mississippi proper is 2,900; the Missouri, from its source to where it joins the Mississippi, 3,096. The Amazon is longest of all, being more than 4,000. Brazil has 2,300,000 square miles; the United States (exclusive of Alaska, 894,000), 2 844,900 square miles.

Brooklyn No. 2.—"Suppose, in pitching, the first ball is unfairly delivered, and the batsman strikes at and hits the second struck foul; the third is called one strike, and the fourth is again out of reach. Is the fourth—that is, the last named ball delivered—to be called one ball? Should the fourth ball be delivered, and the batsman refuse to strike, how can only two balls have been delivered, which can be counted as two of the three which "constitute a ball to be called.

T. W.—The present engagement of Canfield and Booker is the first that they have ever fulfilled in this city. Mr. Booker has played here before, and was for some time connected with minstrel troupes in Brooklyn—Hooley's and Welsh, Hughes & White's Minstrels. Together they have been playing in the vicinity of New York with Cal Wagner's Minstrels, also J. H. Haverly's, and in the principal variety theatres.

J. K. H., Hoboken.—1. Dutchman trotted against Awful on one Beacon Course, N. J., in 1838 and 1839. 2. Dutchman frequently trotted the Beacon Course. 3. Confederate also trotted against Dutchman as early as 1836; but not "one time, just now, to ascertain as to whether or not Don Bicerce, Dutchman and Awful will meet together on the Beacon Course." The race was sold to Squire Osbaldeston, and was taken to England.

C. A. B.—"When there is a man on the first base and the batter hits a ball, when the man should run to help him, he be made without touching the man running to second, if at all or is it necessary, to make a double-play, that you must touch the runner from one base to next?"..... In such case the batsman is out if he omitted to touch the second base, and they threw to first to put out the striker.

W. A. E., Cincinnati.—1. There is a penalty attached to each point on the table in the American game; but there is none in the three-ball carom game. 2. The penalty varies, being either one, two or three points, according to the method adopted of counting caroms. 3. Having once touched your ball, even though it was not moved, it is a shot.

Fox Mendoon, Virginia.—1. Wooden shoe; gray stocking; dark pantaloons a little too short; a very long vest, of any color, with large buttons; long coat, with plenty of buttons; leather stock, with high, pointed collar; flaxen wig; and a cap with a peak. 2, 3. You could not command a Barbary mill on his present experience.

Texas Bill, Galveston.—The citizenship of the father makes a citizen of the son. But, even though the father never becomes a citizen, the son, if born here, is eligible to the Presidency of the United States, provided he shall have done something to forfeit that citizenship which is his birthright.

Q. H. W., Fond du Lac.—4. All having stood their hands until it reached the dealer, who knocks, he is obliged to turn up the widow." 2. He can "feint" as much as he pleases. As he won't run the cards unless it pleases him, and he, he can't do it, anyhow, and the oldest and boldest bears, his "feinting" cannot make any difference.

Ben Brickton, Boston.—You lose. Although this answer does not do their poor partner her, yet it may be a salve for you to understand that the umpire did not decide the same a draw. As required by the rules, he omitted it to the last even trumping hand, the score at the close of which was a tie. Had it been "odd trick," you would have won.

Kiowa.—1. The "St. Louis nine," as far as any betting made on them is concerned, consists of the nine the club chose to place in the field in any championship match to be played. They have a team of from three to twelve players, and their "nine" are the nine players they choose to take part in a match.

Frank Lee, Cincinnati.—"We are playing a four-handed partner game of cribbage. A plays a ten, B a king, C a trey, D a deuce, A a four, making 29, and a sequence of three. B and C call 'a go.' D plays another deuce, which makes 31, and A should have a sequence of three. Does the latter play constitute a sequence?"..... No.

Evening Star Office, Washington.—No. 3 should be made to pay for the game. It is the business to accomplish, it is never added as No. 1, unless the player with whom he, No. 3, played even, also gave odds to No. 1. No. 2 beat No. 1, and that clears the former. The case would be different had mixed odds been given.

Mint Randolph.—San Francisco.—The thrower of the second 41 is "next highest," and notthe thrower of the 40. The former is "next highest," for the purpose of the raffle, because he is highest in the series except the one stated, original thrower of 41, with whom, as the two stand equal, he throws off.

G. W.—The meaning was that that player lost who shot that the Bostons would score eight runs. For "8" read "A," as the answer abundantly explained. The use of "A" and "B" for illustration invites transpositions of this kind.

Will McCabe, Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Club in 1869 played 57 regular matches, winning 56, and having one tie game, scored a total of 1,574 runs to 574. Average, 27 runs. Innings by 4 to 9 and 17 to 8, Atlantic by 32 to 10, Eckford by 24 to 4, Irvington 20 to 4, Athletic 27 to 18 and 17 to 12.

Pilot.—The first negro minstrel band that performed here in public was Frank Brower's, of which Billy Whitlock and Sam Emmet, Billy Whitlock and R. W. Pelham. Their first public performance was at the Chatham Theatre in this city in February, 1843.

Kiss and Creek.—Such a nine as you propose would be as follows: White, c.; Spalding, p.; Start, 1st b.; Barnes, 2d b.; Burdock, 3d b.; G. Wright, s. s.; Leonard, l. f.; Hall, c. f.; Beals, r. f. This would not include change catcher and pitcher.

N. D.—1. Any of the leaders of the orchestras attached to our variety theatres would furnish the music. The price would be a matter of private agreement. 2. Apply to some manager in person, or put the matter in charge of one of the dramatic agencies.

J. P. F., Jersey City Heights.—London is under various jurisdictions, including that of the Lord Mayor and corporation, the Metropolitan Board of Works, Commissioners of Police, and other local organizations; but the Lord Mayor's authority extends over the old city only.

Lou M., Covington.—1. Practice the specialties of some performer whom you have seen, and strive to improve upon them. 2. Performers of ability do not take apprentices nowadays. 3. From $25 to $100 per week according to merit and reputation. 4. They can.

Senex, Baltimore.—1 and 2. The lines are familiar enough, but we can not recall their authors. 3. It is a figure of speech, and refers to a trifling sin. See New Testament (Mather, chap. vii, v. 3) for "mote" and "beam."

C. C., R. I.—1. Kee-o-te is the Spanish pronunciation; Quicksott, the English. 2. Dante wrote "Inferno," a poem. Any first-class publishing-house can furnish you with a metrical translation of it. There are several versions in prose, perhaps the best of which is John A. Carlyle's.

A. B. S., Suncook.—1. Bring the case before the National Association. The horse and all the parties arraigned are liable to expulsion. 2. Send your address and name on a card, and he will procure for you a copy. 3. No answers by mail.

Pyron, New Brunswick.—C, who gave three and made three, is out with his high, which counts before B's low. Had C made low-jack-game to B's high, then C would have lost.

R. M.—1. At card poker, ace may be either high or low. 2. At dice-poker, ace is always low. 3. At the latter, five 4's will beat four of a kind, as four 5's and a 5, or four 6's and a 5.

C. H., Connolly, Guelph.—A man cannot be given out leg before wicket unless the ball is pitched straight; and not then unless it would have hit the wicket but for the body of the batsman.

Brick, N. J.—It means that the Hartfords forfeited to the Athletics by a score of 9 to 0. 2. The letter T, in our baseball scores, means the number of times each player went to the bat.

J. L. Hickes, Audenried, Pa.—1. The Philadelphias were never champions. 2. The Athletics were champions one season. 3. Three seasons. The Bostons after 1871. 4. Umpires receive from $5 to $10.

T. C. T.—There was no dead heat for the Baltimore Cup this year, and consequently no "second dash" between Fadladeen, Galway and Preakness. It was almost a walk-over for the latter.

T. R.—Mrs. Coleman was the first woman that performed on the English stage. She acted Ianthe in Davenant's "Siege of Rhodes" in London, Eng., in 1656, but we cannot say at what theatre.

M. W., Pittsburg.—1. The ball is to be respotted in front of the hole, and the striker will then repeat his stroke. 2. Have mailed four postage-stamps for money forwarded.

Ten Cents, Brooklyn.—We cannot, because we have not seen the show; and in the list of the company furnished us that act was not specified. It was probably performed by somebody who does a number of specialties.

C. E. J., Scranton.—We have not the rules as laid down by J. L. Baldwin, for the reason that if he is, as you say, "English authority upon whist, he is but one of a multitude of such authorities.

Mary Ransome, Springfield, Ill.—We published sketches of the lives of these parties long ago, and cannot afford the space to repeat them. Thank you for suggestions. The Clipper is ever on the progressive order.

E. D. G., Mexico.—Five innings constitute a legal game, and you lose, if the score was a tie. When you make such a bet as that, and do not intend that a tie shall be against you, you should say so.

W. F. F., Westfield.—You do not lose your shot. The balls are to be replaced (provided you did not hit your own a second time), the second stroke being purely your own act), and you will then play your shot.

W. Adams Jr., Chicago.—There is such a mongrel game. It is a combination of all-fours, auction pitch, and California jack. Sometimes it is called pedro (there is then no count for the nine-spot), and sometimes sancho-pedro.

Sam D.—1. England is a free-trade country. 2. His wife is entitled to one-third, and his children to the remainder, if a citizen dies without making a will. It is different if he is an alien holding real-estate here.

R. A. C.—No one point has precedence over another at casino. That which is called "the game" is the point which first calls out. Should he call without having enough, he loses the game.

W. H. McG., Newcastle.—You charge the error—there was none—to no player; only the striker does not get his base on a hit when he gives the field a chance to put a player out on second or third.

C. E. S., St. Louis.—What is the highest throw in "jerking" 60 yards?..... The purport of this question is unintelligible to us; for the highest that can be thrown at once is manifestly seven.

Empire, Wilmington.—1. The Clipper Almanac, price 15cts, contains the information wanted. 2. No record of time made by the new line. 3. They have not yet had a fair trial for purposes of comparison.

F. Collins & Co., Toronto.—Cannot send a copy, but you may obtain it in book-form from Robt. De Witt, 33 Rose street, this city.

Fagineck.—It was published in The Clipper dated June 26, 1875.

A Saint, St. Catherines.—There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent President Grant's running for a third or even a thirteenth term.

Race-horse, Portsmouth, O.—1. George and Harry are brothers. 2. Send to De Witt, 33 Rose street, N. Y. 3. Perhaps you mean Johnny Hooke. 4. We do not know.

L. M. F., Cannington.—Address Foster & Nye, Flint, Michigan. 2. Membrino Gift is nine years old. 3. Cannot recommend it.

Newo, St. John.—It means that, in advertising his show, he uses no posters or bills which are pasted upon fences or walls.

C. F., Brockville.—You had better stick to your trade. It would take you longer than three years to attain to any proficiency upon the stage.

A. L. B., Trenton.—Trustee was to trot twenty miles inside of an hour, and he did it in 59:35½, and other heroes have since done it in less time than that.

Farmer, Taunton.—You win. There is this very simple reason for it: As the score was 3 to 3, the Bostons did not make three runs more than the Atlantics.

A Reader.—You lose. The question is simply one of fact. Each party was betting on his own knowledge, and C.'s was superior to the barkeeper's.

Constant Reader, Cincinnati.—Neither wins. There is but one sensible way to play casino, and that is for a player to claim out as soon as he has points enough.

Pitcher, Terre Haute.—The form of delivery is immaterial, so that the hand holding the ball is kept below the waist while it passes the body in the forward swing.

J. J. L., St. Louis.—1. Tony Pastor's company performed there during the following Summer. 2. Josie Mansfield accompanied one of the lady members of the company.

R. S., Utica.—You are right. The Clipper Almanac is correct. Several horses besides Goldsmith Maid and Occident have beaten Dexter's best time.

J. S., Providence.—"In playing 6, 3, 5, 7, 4, 6 in the game of eribbage, can the person playing the last six count seven holes?"..... Yes.

W. J. S., Corning.—She has closed her traveling season, and the troupe is disbanded, and she is rusticating in the country, where her health is improving.

Agent.—We have not had time to make a thorough search of our files to enable us to give you a definite answer; but we will endeavor to do so in our next issue.

W. B.—Phila.—Neither is wholly right. Three sides of the City Hall, this city, are built of white marble; the north side, of dark stone, known as Nyack freestone.

H. A., Springfield.—So far as we know, such licenses have never been granted except in St. Louis and Cincinnati. No answers by mail or telegraph.

J. J., Pioche.—That the leading player who was nearest the one who pitched trump—that is, nearest on his left—is entitled to the game.

D. A. B., Middlebury.—Your letter has been forwarded. We know nothing of them further than that they issue the publication referred to.

J. C., New Bedford.—John Bright was born in Rochdale, Lancashire, and has represented Durham and Birmingham in Parliament.

H. A. Kendall.—$7.80 was received on May 24. Our bill for $6.90 was mailed before your remittance reached us. He can subscribe through this office.

Dramatic.—Teachers will teach you faults which it may take years to correct. Seek an engagement of general utility, and learn your business as you progress.

E. J. Call upon Mr. T. C. Faulkner, at the office of The Commercial Advertiser, in this city, and he will give you the desired information.

Mr. K., Parker, Pa.—We cannot say, as such officers are frequently changed. A letter addressed to "Yankee" Robinson in care of this office will reach him.

E. L. N., Boston.—All that we know of James King of William, of San Francisco, is that, as editor of The Bulletin, he was murdered by Casey on May 14, 1855.

T. McN., Mt. Morris.—Unless the law has been changed of late years, a delegate from a Territory can speak in Congress, but not vote.

G. W. G., Kendallville.—There are but one or two in the city, and we have been unable to find their addresses. An advertisement will elicit the desired information.

Fuller, Louisville.—The game is finished. It is a waste of chalk and pocket-trimmings to pocket all the balls.

Glove, Humboldt.—Neither Wormald's jaw nor collar-bone was broken in his fight with O'Baldwin, which was broken up by the police at the end of the first round.

Reader, Bridgeport.—According to the programme issued for the reading of the extract sent us, Plaisted started before the word "Go!"

Summers, Baltimore.—The turning-up of the joker gives the dealer the right to name the trump.

U. T. K., Utica.—The only firm of that name that we can find in the Directory are music dealers at 437½ Broadway.

E. H., Phila.—California has not for several years been a good one for a young man seeking light labor.

T. J. G., Wilmington.—O. S. Pratt the horse-tamer is dead, we believe.

Frank, Fort du Chien.—Five fours beat four fours and a five at poker dice.

H. K. W., Galesburg.—We cannot say. A letter addressed to them in care of this office will reach them.

F. A. S. Butler—Ill.; Jack of Diamonds; and Jack, the highest euchre card, beats the ace, and the ace the king.

T. A.—The bet is void, and it is a pity that we cannot decide that A loses.

J. C., Cheyenne.—He can run to second without returning to retouch first base.

Dick Farrell.—They have not been defeated this season.

J. H. C., San Francisco.—They take a base each. 2. No. 3. There is no limit to ordinary balks.

Two Orphans, Phila.—The Hartfords claimed the forfeit game of the Athletics last season.

Paliasade.—They did not beat them in one inning, and A loses.

T. W., Davenport, Iowa.—Hatfield was a member of the Cincinnati Reds.

Baseball, St. Louis.—1. Ten games with each. 2. They will rank about fourth or fifth.

C. C., Chicago.—Hatfield belongs to no club now. He broke his left arm this Spring.

M. M., Chicago.—At seven-up, when the game is a tie, the non-dealer counts it.

R. M., New York City.—1. Five sixes beat five aces at poker-dice. 2. No.

J. W. C., Rondout.—Address a letter to the manager of the theatre, care of the post-office, and it will reach him.

Irelandais; Halifax.—We published a biography of him in vol. 10, p. 269. Copies are out of print.

H. P. A. B., Philadelphia.—Address a letter to them in care of this office.

O. T. E., Richmond.—All we know of him is that he advertises.

Jack, Baltimore.—A, if he elects to take the emperor up, can make the trump to suit himself.

M. N., Ashtabula.—According to the best of our information, John O'Brien is the proprietor.

W. Wilmarth.—Your card will cost 75 cents for each insertion.

Subscribers.—A is out with his high, having made the three he drew.

E. C., West Meriden.—2-14, by Goldsmith Maid. No answers by mail.

H. R., Terre Haute.—2:14, by Goldsmith Maid, at Mystic Park, Boston, June 18, 1874.

W. A. H. F., Hartford.—A wins. Philadelphia has many more houses than New York.

H. C. R.—At cassino it is usual to deal four cards at a time, both to players and dummies.

St. Land J. M., St. Louis.—Give us some clew. What city did the engine belong to?

G. A. F., Beresford.—A flush beats a straight at whiskey-poker, we believe.

Wm. F. Berry Jr.—Your subscription expires with No. 94 of the present volume.

Old Times, Boston.—We have no record. Such affairs are generally advertising dodgers.

H. V. W., Norfolk.—The name you mention is her real name. Born in 1832.

Prudhon.—He is a circus clown, and uses that title by courtesy. 2. It is the original.

Doc. Jersey City.—Cannot decide. In all likelihood, it is the hearing, from your point of view, of a particular species.

Linden, Boston.—The National Theatre, in your city, was burned for the last time on March 24, 1865.

Willis.—William Winter of The Tribune; Henry Sedley, and more rarely Fitzgerald Tyler, of The New York Times.

H. P. G., Terre Haute.—We do not think he is engaged at present.

W. P., St. Louis.—Bets are drawn on such forfeited games, unless made "play or pay."

R. O., Newark.—The ace counts just as much for game, and no more, in auction pitch as in all-fours, viz., four.

Sol Jamieson.—Address Jeff Thompson, Elliott is confined in the Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia.

X. Y. Z., Allegheny City.—Zettlein played with the Chicago Club last year.

Rowdy, Chicago.—1. Yes, Captain Barclay. 2. He would be right in so doing.

Rosebud, Phila.—1. He attempted it, but failed. 2. No; but he fought a drawn battle.

Andy Hennings, Washington.—Send on a deposit to make it good.

James Wheeler, Wheeling.—Write to Stephen Roberts, 505 South Second street, this city.

Declined.—"She's Woven Round My Heart," "Widow and her Son," "Mulligan's Irish Brigade."

Dutch Cowsman, St. Louis.—No charge, if accepted.

T. E. P., Altoona.—15 cents per line, each insertion.

Imperial.—Will give a definite answer next week.

K. P. C., Corning.—It is purely a matter of opinion.

Dr. Yong, Boston.—Decline Mets to Ed. James.

F. R. W.—He has not played for four years.

P. H. S.—About 35 years of age. A widow.

John L., St. Louis.—Ten games will each.

J. C.—Your letter is no doubt in the place.

F. U. and R.—They played 55 games.

M. D.—Arctic was lost Sept. 27, 1854.

J. C. C.—Such was the case.

R. M.—You lose, of course.

W. B.—Next week.

L. J. S.—Yes.

ADVICE.

This is a commodity of which there is always an overstock in the market. It is something that people are always seeking, but seldom take when offered. It is one of the cheapest things we know of, accounted for by the large stock constantly on hand. You can always get advice at all hours of the day and night, and at a moment's notice. It is not infrequently—in fact, it is very often—tendered without the asking; but, as we have intimated, it is more honored in the breach than in the observance. A man who wouldn't give you an introduction even unto his mother-in-law will be lavish of his advice to you, even pressing it upon you. How often it is that one will go to another and ask his advice in certain matters, and in a very anxious frame of mind, too; and immediately turn about, after receiving what he was so anxious for, and act just contrary to the advice he got from a friend who gave it conscientiously. The fact is, a man will follow the advice of a friend when it accords with his own feelings in the premises, and rarely otherwise. But this does not tend to diminish the stock of voluntary or spontaneous advice constantly on hand and offered at all points, at all hours, and to all men. These is nothing in the world so much sought and so freely tendered, unsolicited, as advice; and nothing so universally ignored. It is said that offered services have an unpleasant odor; with advice, that which is sought seems to possess no more pleasant fragrance than that tendered without the asking. Now, our advice to you, reader, is—Hold up! We are not giving any advice just now, and advise you to do as you please in matters concerning yourself.

The ear-piercing shriek of the Chinese fire-crackers gives indication of the coming of the Fourth-of-July, with its fullness of patriotism and its outpouring of the rocket's red glare, and the lighting-up of all things terrestrial by the Roman-candle, a wick-ed contrivance of fire-workers. Already preparations are being made everywhere for a proper observance of the day we celebrate. We know a man who has built, expressly for Boston, one hundred stump orations; and liberty poems are being ground out by the cartload. Some of them are precious to the ear, and are worth, at current rates, one dollar per dozen, or two for twenty-five cents! No village should be without its own oration and poem on the 4th of July. Brass-bands are also cheap, and no people who shout for freedom should fail to secure one on the anniversary of our national independence. In all the rural cities and provincial towns brass-bands grow wild, like Jamestown weeds, and the nation expects every man to do his duty. The Mayor's annual proclamation against the use of fireworks is in the hands of the printers, while our Custom-house is filled with imported crackers and death-dealing missiles of a higher type. 'Rah!

It has ever been the custom for those who dance to pay the piper; but it is probable that Boston will have a free show, and behold the Piper in the Dance of Death!

The fifth race of the first day of the American Jockey Club's meeting was a close thing. Evans winning a Resolute struggle by a mere Scratch!

Would it be safe or proper to call those persons who continue to reside near the made ground at One Hundred and Ninth street Harlem flats?

New Work in Press.—"Tempers Lost," by the author of "Tempest Tom'd."

St. Louis didn't go to bed on Saturday night. The Brown Sox of that city defeated the champions in a baseball match on the afternoon of June 5, and there was revelry by night; for the people kept open houses, and there was a scene of wild excitement that must have made Chicago feel cheap enough, albeit the latter's representative nine had already got away with the St. Louis Red Sox to the tune of fifteen to nothing—but the Browns gave the champions their first defeat this season! Boston was in the slough of despond. The news reached there just as the people were about to fire a salute of several guns for the anticipated triumph of the Boston party. So they put away the cannon and the powder, to be used on the 17th of June; and the people retired in good order. St. Louis is to be envied; and Boston? Why, let the stricken nine go weep; the Browns, ungalled, play.

The Masons did their level best on Wednesday, June 2, on the occasion of the dedication of their new hall. We met them "on the square" at Fourteenth street, and went one eye on them. "Our Jim," who can against them in South Fifth avenue, came rushing into the office to tell us that the "masons were out on a strike for higher wages, that it was a bigger procession than that of the carpenters last year, and that the police were about in spots to step any riot that might take place should the strikers seek to prevent non-striking masons from working." We explained to the young man that the masons were fully able to maintain good "order" without the interference of the police.

"The American Team," who go to Ireland to uphold the honor of the stars-and-stripes against the friendly green flag of Erin, sailed from this port on Saturday last. May the team return with their "brows bound with victorious wreaths" as rich as those by goldsmith made!

A good deal is being said about Judge Neilson's coming charge to the jury; but nothing has been heard, as yet, about the caterer's charge to the jury for dining them.

President Grant has written a letter declining "a third term," and yet The Herald is not happy. Perhaps it will now require the President to decline a fourth term.

Eye Dears.—Glass optics are so nicely made these days that, as some of our ladies wear them, it is hard to realize that they are not real eyes!

The Masons, and those who came to see them, so crowded our hotels and boarding-places on the second of June that it might be termed a regular inn-ovation!

The Beecher Trial.—In the pools, the odds predominate on a disagreement of the jury, while an acquittal is next in favor, and conviction does not bring high rates.

If the Brooklyn jury were to put a cork in each ear, they could go to sleep quite easily while the speeches are being made.

Should our riflemen out-ride Ireland on her own soil, the people there will be more ire-ish than ever.

The Hippodrome Summer-garden is so called, probably, owing to its hot-house tendencies.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP RECORD.

Defeat of the Bostons.

"Wise men of the East" held an opinion last week that the Reds had passed the Rubicon simply because they had gone through the gauntlet of their Eastern opponents without the loss of a game. After achieving this success, Harry Wright thought he would "go West," and he did. First he dropped in at Cincinnati, just to show his old friends in that neighborhood town that the "old Reds" were still able to hold their own. This done, he went to St. Louis, and there he encountered the full strength of the St. Louis regulars, and, in their first game, apparently with ease took them into camp by a score of 10 to 3. The only place left that was likely to cause trouble to the Reds, it was thought, was Chicago, soon to be visited. Just about this time, however, a piece of "ill-luck" befel the Reds, inasmuch as in their first Red Stocking match at St. Louis their famous catcher White had his thumb split open, and in consequence he had to go into hospital for a week. McVey taking his place. Now, McVey is a fine catcher, but he is not Jim White, for James stands alone; and when Spalding found that he had not Old Reliable behind the bat, he began to feel less confident as to results; and finally, when the Reds came to play their second match with the St. Louis nine, things were not as they were before. The Reds, however, started off with a lead of 4 to 1, and it looked to be a victory for the Reds by dollars to cents. This time, however, the St. Louis team played a splendid up-hill game, quite, in fact, in old-time style, and finally by the sharpest fielding kept the Reds from scoring, while they ran their figure up to a tie score—what a time there was then!—and finally, by a single run, led the score, and when the ninth inning ended with 5 to 4 in favor of St. Louis, anyone would have thought that a big Bonanza had been discovered in the town, and that everybody's fortune was made. Well, it was a victory to be proud of in the face of such a team as Dillon and Diehl can be counted on his success. The other event of the week was the signal defeat of the Mutuals on the occasion of their first game in Chicago. It was thought here that they would win, sure, if only by a small score; but to be whipped by 8 to 0—nearly a duplicate of the original "Chicago massacre"—was something surprising. It led to the dropping of lots of tin here by their backers. Their victory on Saturday did not offset the previous defeat, by any means. However, it remains to be seen what Chicago will do when they meet the Reds. To be whipped, now that St. Louis has won a game, is something that will not be tolerated by the Chicago press.

Things have been quiet here this past week, and they will continue to be so for a week to come, not a championship game being played here for the next ten days. This will be a welcome rest to those who have been paying half a dollar a day to see the daily contests on the Union Grounds the past three weeks.

The record of championship games reported to June 7, inclusive, is appended. It will be seen that the Boston, Hartford and Athletic clubs still occupy the three leading places.

EAGLE vs. WESTERN.

The most interesting, and probably the most warmly contested, game ever witnessed in Louisville, Ky., was played there May 29, between the Westerns of Keokuk, Iowa, aspirants for the championship, and the Eagle Club, Louisville. A correspondent says: "The Westerns visited us last year, and were defeated in the ninth inning by the Keokuk boys were pleased to call a 'scratch-game;' so this season they returned determined to make the Eagles hunt leather by a score of four or five to one. How well they succeeded may be judged from the score. The Eagle won the toss, and Miller of the Westerns went to the bat, but was retired on a fly to right, who got it safe to first. Hallinan also took a back seat without reaching first. Burnie got as far as third, and Quinn to first, but Golden's fly to left was taken by Osborne, and the Westerns retired minus a run. Speed, Muir and Roche of the Eagles each struck out without hitting a ball, leaving a blank for the Eagles. The second and third innings resulted in a whitewash for both sides. In the fourth the Westerns managed to score two, and retired the Eagles with another round. Luck, however, changed in the fifth inning, and, by splendid batting, combined with errors on the part of the pitcher of the Westerns, the Eagles scored five to the Westerns' one. Nothing further was done until the ninth inning, when the Eagles made three, and whitewashed the Westerns, winning by a score of eight to three. Eagle. R. PO. | Western. R. PO. A. E.

Another correspondent, under date of June 2, sends in the following scraps of baseball news: "The Louisville Baseball Club, on May 29, succeeded in getting in another 'scratch' game on the professional Westerns of Keokuk, this time to the tune of 8 to 3. In the summary of games played last season by the Westerns, published in THE CLIPPER, they called the game won from them by the Eagle boys by a score of 4 to 1, and by which they will account for this last defeat remains to be seen. Certain it is, though, they were outplayed at every point. The Keokukers came back this season for revenge, and they got what they least expected. The defeat was in some measure an extent offset by their victory over the Olympic Club of this city, on May 31, in a well-played game by a tally of 11 to 7. The Westerns left for home June 1 to practice, a great deal of which they need before they can cope with the professional nines East and West. The Louisville Eagle Club has been materially strengthened by the addition of Cook, formerly catcher of the Chelseas of Brooklyn, who is as gentlemanly a ball-tosser and as good a player withal as one would wish to meet. With his aid, and with the addition of Morris, formerly of the Eagle Jr., our boys expect to do some ball playing this season, though they will be without the services of that fine fielder Bodley, who has decided not to play this year. They will play the Philadelphias on the 12th. The Olympics, not to be caught napping, have strengthened their nine by the addition of O'Brien, who caught last year for the Westerns. They, too, are in good trim, as was evidenced by their score of 7 to 11 against the Keokuk professionals, and they expect to give a good account of themselves. As we will have several of the crack nines here this season to play, a word or two to them may not be out of place. People here, as in Eastern cities, desire to see the beauties of baseball; and if they anticipate a loose display, they do not care to attend. If all clubs, I mean all professional nines, would play the best they know how, and treat a spectator to as good a display of ball as is possible, they would without doubt vastly increase their receipts. We have had so many games wherein the professionals played loosely, knowing they had insure thing, that many of the baseball public do not care to see them at all. A word to the wise, etc.

ST. LOUIS vs. BOSTON.

Defeat of the Champions.

The St. Louis Browns and the Boston Reds met again on Saturday afternoon, June 5, on the grounds of the former, when the Western team again covered themselves with glory, and gained the greatest victory they have achieved since their organization, by vanquishing the champions, whose career this season had hitherto been marked by an unbroken series of victories. The telegraph informs us that the result of the game created the most intense excitement among the thousands of spectators, who, ladies as well as gentlemen, rose to their feet and honored their triumphant pets with cheer upon cheer, most enthusiastically given. The victory of the Browns over the Chicagos—the club considered to be their greatest rivals—was regarded as glory enough for a week; but this achievement, which was scarcely hoped for, even by the warmest partisans of the St. Louis nine, far eclipsed it in the estimation of the Mound City supporters of the game. Hats were thrown high in the air, and the victorious players were carried around on the backs of their admirers. The Browns won the game on its merits, both outbatting and outfielding their opponents, the few errors the latter did make being very costly, and in nearly every instance giving runs. The Browns led off with one run in the first inning on safe hits of Cuthbert, Pierce, and Chapman. The Bostons followed with four, which proved to be the only runs they were able to get during the game. Both clubs drew blanks in the second and third innings, but in the fourth the Browns added one on a muff by Spalding of a hard-hit ball, which he stopped, but failed to handle, followed by a two-baser by Hague. They added two earned runs in the fifth inning, tieing the score amid intense excitement. Both clubs were whitewashed in the sixth and seventh innings; but in the eighth the home nine were fortunate in getting another run, which proved the winning one. Pierce led off with a fair foul and made second on a passed ball. Pike flew out to Spalding. Chapman hit a grounder through O'Rourke, Hague following with a sharp hit to George Wright, who threw to Barnes, forcing out Chapman; but Barnes threw wild to first, letting Pierce home. Both nines went out in the ninth inning in one-two-three order. The excitement and enthusiasm of the crowd at this time was intense, and everybody happy but the Bostons, who returned to their carriages a defeated but by no means a disheartened party. The Bostons were weakened by the absence of White, whose injury to his thumb prevented his playing. Leonard, Beals, and Cuthbert were credited with remarkable catches in the outfield. Appended is the detailed score:

WASHINGTON vs. NATIONAL.

The second game between the Washington professionals and the amateur Nationals was played at Capitol Park, Washington, Wednesday, June 2, and attracted a large crowd. The first game, to the surprise of all, was won by the Nationals, after a very exciting contest of ten innings, by a score of 7 to 6. Since then the professionals have greatly strengthened their nine by the addition of Brady, Doescher, and McCloskey, and it was expected that they would have but little trouble in winning the game. Play was called at 4.30 P. M., with the Washingtons at the bat, Hough filling Jennings' place at first-base, and Chambers taking Hough's place at right-field (Jennings having failed to make his appearance), for the Nationals—unavoidable change, which probably lost them the game. In the first inning, through errors of Hough, Lusk and Trott, the Washingtons scored six unearned runs, although they made but one base-hit. Seven of the eleven errors made during the game by the Nationals were made in this inning. In the third inning the Nationals scored an earned run through good hits of Greason and Chambers. The Washingtons scored two unearned runs in both the sixth and seventh innings through errors of Kipp, Stevens and Greason. In the seventh inning the Nationals scored five runs—two earned—a base-hit by Chambers, a three-base-hit by Kipp, and a two-base hit by Hough, together with a wild throw to second base by Parks, giving the runs. Neither side scored in the last two innings, the fielding being very fine. Chambers led both at the bat and in the field for the Nationals, Daley doing the best batting, and Doescher the best fielding, for the Washingtons. By reference to the score, it will be seen that the Nationals outbatted and, after the first inning, outfielded their opponents.

ATHLETIC vs. NEW HAVEN.

The Athletics defeated the New Havens for the fourth time this season on June 5, the game being played on the former's ground, at 25th and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, in the presence of a couple of hundred spectators. The Athletics made a "new departure" on this occasion, Fisler making his reappearance and assuming his old position at first base, while Anson played right-field and Bechtel accepted as pitcher, the latter change being necessary in consequence of McBride's illness. The New Havens started off with the lead, making one run on a couple of safe one-base hits and a passed ball by Clapp in the first inning. The Athletics were blanked the first four innings, Sutton and Hall making the first five base-hits and four out of the first five runs, errors by Banker, Luff, McGinley and Sommerville preventing any of these from being earned. McGinley, in the first inning of the New Havens, made a fine three-base hit, but was left by a brilliant bit of fielding on the part of Force; and McKelvey opened the following inning with a three-base hit, but he, too, was left, thanks to Hall's fine fielding, he making one of the most wonderful running one-handed catches ever witnessed. The Athletics earned three runs in the seventh inning, Clapp making a splendid three-base hit and Sutton a fine two-base hit. An error by Sutton gave the New Havens their second run. The Athletics' fielding was again almost faultless; Sutton and Hall, however, being the only two able to hit Ryan's very effective pitching.

BEACON vs. CHELSEA.

A fair-sized audience gathered on the Boston Grounds on Saturday, June 5, in the expectation of witnessing a close game for the amateur championship between the Beacons and Chelseas. The Chelseas made three runs in their first inning on bad fielding errors of the Beacons, but were unable to score thereafter, as they failed to do anything with Lamb's effective delivery, well backed up in the field. Cotting caught, Crane played second base, and Pierce centre field in the first inning. The Chelseas worked hard to get a run in, and got many men on bases, in the fourth inning having the bases full, with but one out; but a hot line-catch by Lloyd, on which he made a double-play, closed the inning. Sumner and Nunn made handsome running catches, and Crane and Hunt played their positions finely. In batting Lamb of the Chelseas was very poor, catcher and third base being the specially weak spots. The Beacons batted very heavily, hitting the pitching of Egan and Foye, who relieved him in the fourth inning, all over the field. Crane and Lamb took the lead at the bat, Hunt also getting in two very heavy hits. The Chelseas were stripped by the absence of their first-baseman, Hodges taking the base—a new position to him.

CHICAGO vs. MUTUAL.

Nine Ciphers for the New Yorkers.

The opening game between the metropolitan Mutes and the White Stockings of the Phœnix City was in order on the grounds of the latter on Thursday, June 3, and resulted most disastrously for the lads from Gotham, who were feasted upon goose-eggs all through. The Chicagos batted safely and fielded grandly, while the Mutuals were weak at the bat and but fair in the field. Hicks repeatedly threw wildly.

WESTERN vs. OLYMPIC.

On Monday, May 31, the Olympics of Louisville, Ky., tested their strength with the Westerns, and, although they were not so successful as the Eagles, the game was a fine one, and closer than expected. In the first inning the Olympics made some very bad plays, allowing the Westerns to score four, and from the efforts of their bad playing in this inning they never fully rallied. Throughout the game the Olympics battled well; in fact, they did much better than was looked for by the most sanguine.

ATHLETIC vs. NEW HAVEN.

The third championship game between the Athletic and New Haven Clubs was played June 4 on the Centennial Ground, Philadelphia. Eggler made his reappearance with the Athletics in this game, Richmond making his debut as catcher in a professional contest, as Clapp was absent. The New Havens scored in only one inning, making five runs in the fourth, all after two men were out, five good hits being credited to them, excusable errors by Richmond preventing, however, more than two from being earned. The Athletics won easily, scoring in every inning except the last, Craver earning one by a clean home-run in the eighth inning, and Eggler another run after leading off with a two-base hit. Ryan pitched for the New Havens in the fifth and sixth innings, and caught the last three innings, Luff then resuming his position of pitcher. The Athletics' fielding could scarcely be improved upon, but one of the New Havens reaching first base on an error. Force and Anson played finely in their respective positions, and Craver excelled in batting. Ryan's general playing was noteworthy on behalf of the New Havens.

BEACON vs. BOSTON AMATEUR.

A "Hartford" Bat.

The Beacons played a match for the amateur championship with the Boston Amateurs, on the Boston Ground, on Friday, June 4, winning by 19 to 10. A correspondent says: "The Amateurs made a good show at the bat, and gave their opponents a much tighter pull than was expected, the score being close till the seventh inning, Malloy and Hunter doing the best batting. The fielding of the Amateurs was very poor. The Beacons batted well off Hogan's delivery (which is illegal, as his hand is raised much higher than the hip),

THE SEVENTEENTH OF JUNE.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes' Ballad.

Grandmother's Story of Bunker Hill Battle, as She Saw it from the Belfry.

'Tis like stirring living embers, when, at eighty, one remembers
All the schings and the quakings of "the times that tried men's souls:"
When I talk of Whig and Tory, when I tell the Rebel story,
To you the words are ashes, but to me they're burning coals.

I had heard the muskets' rattle of the April running battle;
Lord Percy's hunted soldiers, I can see their red coats still!
But a deadly chill comes o'er me, as the day looms up before me,
When a thousand men lay bleeding on the slopes of Bunker's Hill.

'Twas a peaceful Summer's morning, when the first thing gave us warning
Was the booming of the cannon from the river and the shore;
"Child," says grandma, "what's the matter, what is all this noise and clatter?
Haven't those scalping Indian devils come to murder us once more?"

Poor old soul! my sides were shaking in the midst of all my quaking,
To hear her talk of Indians when the guns began to roar;
She had seen the burning village, and the slaughter and the pillage,
When the Mohawks killed her father with their bullets through his door.

Then I said, "Now, dear old granny, don't you fret and worry any,
For I'll soon come back and tell you whether this is work or play;
There can't be mischief in it, so I won't be gone a minute"—
For a minute then I started. I was gone the live-long day.

No time for bodice-lacing or for looking-glass grimacing;
Down my hair went as I hurried, tumbling half-way to my heels;
God forbid your ever knowing, when there's blood around her flowing,
How the lonely, helpless daughter of a quiet household feels!

In the street I heard a thumping; and I knew it was the stumping
Of the Corporal, our old neighbor, on that wooden leg he wore,
With a knot of women round him—it was lucky I had found him,
So I followed with the others, and the Corporal marched before.

They were making for the steeple, the old soldier and his people;
The pigeons circled round us as we climbed the creaking stair.
Just across the narrow river—oh, so close it made me shiver!
Stood a fortress on the hill-top that but yesterday was bare.

Not slow our eyes to find it; well we knew who stood behind it,
Though the earth-work hid them from us, and the stubborn walls were dumb;
Here were sister, wife, and mother, looking wild upon each other,
And their lips were white with terror as they said "THE HOUR HAS COME!"

The morning slowly wasted, not a morsel had we tasted,
And our heads were almost splitting with the cannons' deafening thrill,
When a figure tall and stately round the rampart strode decisively—
It was Prescott, one since told me; he commanded on the hill.

Every woman's heart grew bigger when we saw his manly figure,
With the banyan buckled round it, standing up so straight and tall;
Like a gentleman of leisure who is strolling out for pleasure,
Through the storm of shells and cannon-shot he walked around the wall.

At eleven the streets were swarming, for the red-coats' ranks were forming;
At noon in marching order they were moving to the piers;
How the bayonets gleamed and glistened, as we looked far down and listened
To the trampling and the drum-beat of the belted grenadiers.

At length the men have started, with a cheer (it seemed fair-hearted),
In their scarlet regimentals, with their knapsacks on their backs.
And the widening, rippling water, as after a sea-fight's slaughter,
Round the barges gliding onward blushed like blood along their tracks.

So they crossed to the other border, and again they formed in order;
And the boats came back for soldiers, came for soldiers, soldiers still;
The time seemed everlasting to us women, faint and fasting,
At last they're moving, marching, marching proudly up the hill.

We can see the bright steel glancing all along the lines advancing—
Now the front rank fires a volley—they have thrown away their shot!
For behind their earthwork lying, all the balls above them flying,
Our people need not hurry; so they wait and answer not.

Then the Corporal, our old cripple (he would swear sometimes and ripple)—
He had heard the bullets whistle (in the old French war) before—
Calls out in words of jeering, just as if they all were hearing,
And his wooden leg thumps fiercely on the dusty belfry floor:

"Oh, fire away, ye villains, and earn King George's shillin's,
But you'll waste a ton of powder before a 'rebel' falls;
You may bang the dirt and welcome, they're as safe as Dan'l Malcolm,
Ten foot beneath the gravestone that you've splintered with your balls!"

In the hush of expectation, in the awe and trepidation
Of the dread-approaching moment, we are well-nigh breathless all;
Though the rotten bars are falling on the rickety belfry falling,
We are crowding up against them like the waves against a wall.

Just a glimpse (the air is clearer), they are nearer—nearer—nearer,
When a flash—a curling smoke-wreath—then a crash—the steeple shakes—
The deadly truce is ended; the tempest's shroud is rended;
Like a morning mist it gathered, like a thunder-cloud it breaks!

Oh, the sight our eyes discover as the blue-black smoke blows over!
The red-coats stretched in windrows as a mower rakes his hay;
Here a scarlet heap is lying, there a headlong crowd is flying,
Like a billow that has broken and is shivered into spray.

Then we cried: "The troops are routed! They are beat; it can't be doubted!
God be thanked the battle fight is over!" Ah, the grim old soldier's smile!
"Tell us, tell us why you look so!" (We could hardly speak, we shook so),
"Are they beaten? Are they beaten? ARE they beaten?"
"Wait a while."

Oh, the trembling and the terror! for too soon we saw our error:
They are baffled, not defeated; we have driven them back in vain;
And the columns that were scattered, round the colors that were tattered,
Toward the silent, sullen fortress turn their belted breasts again.

All at once, as we were gazing, lo, the roofs of Charlestown blazing!
They have fired the harmless village; in an hour it will be down!
The Lord in heaven confound them, rain his fire and brimstone round them,
The robbing, murdering red-coats, that would burn a peaceful town!

They are marching, stern and solemn; we can see each massive column
As they near the naked earth-mound with the slanting walls so steep.
Have our soldiers got faint-hearted, and in noiseless haste departed?
Are they panic-struck and helpless? Are they palsied or asleep?

Now! the walls they're almost under! scarce a rod the foe has asunder!
Not a firelock flashed against them! up the earthwork they will swarm!
But the words have scarce been spoken, when the ominous calm was broken,
And a hallowing crash has emptied all the vengeance of the storm!

So again, with murderous slaughter, pelted backwards to the water,
Fly Pigot's running heroes and the frightened braves of Howe!
And we shout, "At last they're done for, it's their barges they have run for;
They are beaten, beaten, beaten; and the battle's over now!"

And we looked, poor timid creatures, on the rough old soldier's features,
Our lips afraid to question, but he knew what we would ask:
"Not more," he said; "keep quiet—once more, I guess, they'll try it—
Here's damnation to the cut-throats!"—then he handed me his flask;

Saying, "Gal, you're looking shaky; have a drop of old Jamaiky;
I'm afraid there'll be more trouble before the job is done;"
So I took one scorching swallow; dreadful faint I felt and hollow
Standing there from early morning when the firing was begun.

All through those hours of trial I had watched a calm clock dial,
As the hands kept creeping, creeping—they were creeping round to four,
When the old man said, "They're forming with their bagonets fired for storming;"
It's the death-grip that's a-coming—they will try the works once more."

With brazen trumpets blaring, the flames behind them glaring,
Shipped his oars and moved towards her, pointing his finger all the while at a spot in the water behind her.

She turned her head in the direction indicated, seeing something strange in its look, and cried:

"Good Heavens! What is it, Vivian boy?"

Simultaneously, she received a powerful blow on the temple, which instantly stunned her. A moment after, her body was floating rapidly down the bay with the receding tide.

"Thank God! she's gone," said the ruffian, with a heavy sigh of relief. "Now to leave the boat somewhere on the Jersey shore. Ah! but it was well done," he continued, as he vigorously plied the oars, thinking of Mrs. Waverton, and little recking of Thor and his hammer, or the avenging Nemesis.

A keen, sagacious ear had heart the plash when the woman's lifeless body touched the water; and, guided by the unerring eye of instinct, the rescuer plunged through the seething tide, and soon upheld the poor creature in his massive jaws. Her savior was an immense Newfoundland dog, belonging to a small schooner that was dropping quietly down the bay with the tide. A boat was quickly launched, for "Rover" never gave a false alarm, and the insensible woman was soon on board, under the influence of restoratives applied by rough but kindly hands.

The "Sally of Bristol" was bound to Liverpool; and it never occurred to either Captain Harty or any of his crew to put the rescued lady ashore. The vessel was kept steadily on her course, and in the blaze of a brilliant moonlight Sandy Hook was passed. It was not till then that Mrs. Arnold's suspended consciousness returned.

"Murdered! murdered! murdered!" she muttered, while her frame quivered convulsively.

The kind old captain subsequently nursed her, as if she had been his own child; but, though she took considerable nourishment, her intellect seemed hopelessly gone. She had but the one dominant impression that a murder had been committed.

Off the Banks of Newfoundland, Captain Harty was sorely tried, one stormy night, when scudding beneath close-reefed topsails, to discover that his crazy, helpless charge was in the agonies of parturition; and under these indescribably solemn circumstances, with the storm shrieking through the shrouds and the hatches closed, a healthy female child was born. Curious to relate, twenty-four hours afterward the mother recovered her reason.

Adverse winds prolonged the voyage of the Sally; but Mabel and her baby improved wonderfully, and Captain Harty learnt her sad story, and by his advice she committed it to paper in the intervals of leisure.

As they neared the coast of Ireland, the sun had not been seen for several days; and, in consequence of some mistake in the "dead reckoning," the man at the lookout at daybreak, one morning, shouted:

"Breakers ahead! Helm aport!"

"Aye, aye, sir," responded the man at the wheel.

It was a terrible moment. Mabel clasped her child to her breast and hastened on deck, where all was now confusion. Captain Harty, half-dressed, was at the helm. The seamen were paralyzed. Rover rushed around, barking furiously. A minute after, the schooner struck an unseen rock, and every soul on board was washed into the boiling surf. The dog's instinct led him to help the weaker. He sustained the mother and child until they reached the shore, where some gipsies who were encamped within sight of the disaster immediately relieved the dog of his burden.

The tender infant, wrapt in a blanket, was wet but unscathed; but the mother's head had been dashed against a sharp rock; and five minutes after she had been saved from the sea, she left her babe a waif in the world.

The gipsy women searched the poor mother's body for valuables and evidences of identity, but found little beyond a few trinkets and the document in which Mabel had told her mournful story. The gipsy men also obtained some trifling plunder from the wreck, when they were chased off by the officers of the Coast-guard Service.

A few weeks later the Zingari gang crossed over to England, and delivered to the queen of their tribe, Jean Faa of Yetholm—the gipsy capital on the borders of Scotland—the results of their marauding in Ireland. The gipsy queen was a wondrously tall, powerfully-built, swarthy Amazon of fifty Summers. She was childless, and for ten years had been a widow, and the scourge and tyrant of her tribe. She received the tiny orphan ungraciously. There were "brats enow in the tribe," she said; but the document greatly excited her cupidity. She could neither read nor write, and in the eyes of the whole "Faa gang," as they were termed, a manuscript possessed a highly mysterious importance. For days after the infant was received in the village, Queen Jean wandered around the surrounding villages telling fortunes, and ever and again producing this document and having it read to her by a line at a time, until she had learnt its contents by rote. Many a kindly-disposed interpreter had offered to read it from beginning to end for her; but Jean was too jealous of her secret to trust it in any person's keeping.

"Na, na; aw jeest want to hear that line the now;" and she took the next line to somebody at a distance.

After her detour, she clung more kindly to the babe; and, reared by this extraordinary Zingari fortune-teller, amid the gipsy encampments, Mabel's child grew up as modest as the violets and sweet as the wild roses of the Cheviot dales.

Mr. Vivian Arnold and Mrs. Winifred Waverton billed and cooed until their mutual adoration found a natural consummation in a private union. Afterwards, for a brief period, the critics said that "their acting appeared to gain rather than lose in intensity;" and amid testimonial benefits, red-fire, and glory they left New York on a starring tour.

They proved a very discordant and incompatible pair in hymeneal harness. Both were inordinately vain, hot-tempered and jealous; but she was a high-principled woman, while he was—just as we have seen him. He soon proved unfaithful to his marriage vows—what were marriage vows to a murderer?—and in New Orleans there was an open rupture, and Mrs. Waverton's gilded matrimonial misery was ended by another divorce. Shortly afterwards Mr. Arnold returned to England, where a crack-brained old maid fell in love with him, dying soon after, leaving him her vast wealth, instead of endowing hospitals, as she had previously determined. Mr. Arnold then retired from the stage amid great eclat, set up a country mansion and a town-house, became a liberal patron of the drama and the fine arts, obtained a seat in Parliament, was elected a member of several aristocratic clubs, and occupied a pew in a fashionable West-end church.

May Faa—as the orphan was called—at fourteen was the beauty of Tillaide. Many a young shepherd stopped to listen to her sweet voice, as, tripping to the crystal spring for water for her stepmother, she would sing:

"Ca' the yowes to the knowes,
Ca' them where the heather grows,
Ca' them where the burnie rows,
My bonnie dearie."

In the gipsy camp she had a fierce admirer in the person of "Red Ike," as the young vagabond was nicknamed. When the admiring glances of strangers were directed at May, Ike's gorge rose, and it was difficult to restrain his resentment. The aged queen now loved the young girl tenderly, and saw with deep disapproval this absorbing passion on the part of one of the most savage cut-throats in her whole gang. She saw that it would need all her authority to restrain so impetuous a villain, and she felt that she was drawing at once to the end of her reign and her life. Whereupon Queen Faa was inspired by a high and disinterested resolve—she would place her hoarded gold in the hands of a trusted Edinburgh lawyer, and constitute him May's guardian, in order that she might be educated to fill some place in the society to which she naturally belonged.

This transfer was finally effected after many tears on the part of the old crone and the young girl, and many promises that the mother would come often and see her lassie. It had been effected, too, without the knowledge of the tribe; and not a Faa—not even Red Ike—dared to ask what had become of May. Once a year the old queen would proceed, with a portion of her tribe and their straggling caravan of horses, donkeys, dogs, wagons and camp furniture, towards the neighborhood of Edinburgh, where Queen Jean would leave the band in "close camp," while she hied away to Lawyer McPherson's to inquire after the welfare and the progress of May. Yet these visits were all unknown to the girl; it was a solemn stipulation on the old queen's part that the lassie should never hear of or see the woman who had been a mother to her on this side the grave.

The young girl was an extraordinary student, and her progress in music was quite phenomenal. Four years after she left Yetholm, the old queen was astounded to learn that, under the Latinized name of Maia Eudola, the "bonnie, bright-eyed lassie" had been sent to Paris to study singing as a profession.

In three years more the infirm old queen learnt that Mlle. Eudola had made her triumphant debut in grand opera. Next year she was raging like a fever at Vienna and St. Petersburg; the next at London, and she was the owner of more diamonds than would ransom a prince.

Jean Faa listened to these glowing annual statements with ever-increasing wonder and delight. In some (to her) incomprehensible way, she prided herself on having been the cause of all this wealth and triumph and renown, and she had an intense desire to hear her bonnie pet sing—"lilt," she called it—once more, before she was laid away under the daisies.

When, therefore, Lawyer McPherson's annual statement included the item that May was shortly to be married, Jean exclaimed:

"Eh, man? God forbid, till aw hear her sing."

"You'll have to go to London right away, then, Jean," replied the lawyer.

"Is she tae wed sae soon?"

"In a week."

"Ye'll be gaun up to the sairemony?"

"Yes."

"Who's the man?"

"A Member of Parliament."

"Gude save us! Wha wad hae thocht maw bit lassie wad wed a Member o' Pairliament! Weel, weel," she resumed after mature reflection, "aye maun write me a bit letter to the lassie, an' I'll tak it to her an' hear her sing—am off for Lunnen t'morrow t'morn."

Queen Faa was greatly disappointed with her pet's new style of singing.

"Its nothin' but screamin', and tantivvying up and down, up and down; nothin' like the bonnie sweet sangs she used to sing," the old woman sollioquized in her retired box, where she sat and gloried in the fame, yet deprecating the singing.

On the morning of the wedding she met Lawyer McPherson, and he gave her an order to be present at the ceremony in St. George's, Hanover square. An hour before the time appointed, Jean, with her straggling white hair, picturesque black hat, immense red cloak, and huge bent form leaning on her staff, was compelled to elbowing her way towards the altar. There she took a seat, the cynosure of all eyes, and awaited further developments.

The brilliant bridal party ended, and the ceremony proceeded. The bridegroom was a handsome man of uncertain age—it was so hard to tell what was real and what was artificial about his face.

"Will thou, Vivian Arnold, take ——"

"What name is that?" asked the gipsy queen, in a loud voice, at the same time rising and stretching her witch-like form to its utmost height.

The officials surrounded her and enforced silence; and the solemnization was completed. The prima donna was the wife of the Honorable Vivian Arnold, M. P.

When the party proceeded to the vestry, Jean burst into the midst of them.

"I maun hae a word wi' the minister!" she cried.

Unwillingly, the interview was accorded. The document of Mabel Arnold was produced and pondered; and ten minutes later Arnold the villain grew ghastly pale, and the guests were horror-struck to learn that he had married his own daughter!

He left the church alone; and when night came he hid his crime and his shame beneath the muddy waters of the Thames.

A few days afterwards the old gipsy crone saw the dripping, disfigured body.

"Aye, aye; there ye lie," said she, addressing it. "Tha Ronald's curse has fallen. I knew she wad meet ye some time, if ye were I' the land o' the living, and avenge her puir mither."

As for the unfortunate young singer, she used her black-hearted father's wealth to endow a convent, and neither the stage nor the world knew her any more.

THE GRAVE'S VOICES.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN,
BY ANTONIA DICKSON.

Sunk as in dreams, and lost in anxious thought,
My footsteps brought me to this lonely spot.
To whom belongs the field? this flowery bed?
"The dead."

Enter thou in, my soul: why shouldst thou fear?
Naught but sweet buds and flowers are blooming here.
Whence comes the essence to for these sweet perfumes?
"From tombs."

See here, O man! where all thy paths must end,
However varied be the way they wend.
Listen! the dead leaves speak: aye, hear thou must:
"To dust."

Where are the careless hearts that on the earth
Trembled in pain, or beat so high in mirth?
Those in whose breasts the flame of hatred smouldered?
"Forgot."

Where are the mighty who take life by storm?
Who e'en to Heaven's heights will wishes form?
What croak the ravens on yon moss-grown wall?
"Woe."

Where are the dear ones in Death's cold sleep lying,
To whom Love swore a memory undying?
What wail yon cypress-trees?—oh, hear'st thou not?
"Forgot."

To see where these ones passed, did no eye crave?
May no wild longing pierce beyond the grave?
The fir-trees shake their weird heads one by one:
"None, none."

The evening wind amid the trees is sighing,
Fettered in dreams, my troubled soul is lying;
The twilight falls, the red glow paleth fast—
"'Tis past."

THE MAN WITH THE GAME LEG.

Yesterday a hand-organist sat down before a house on Congress street and began to turn out sweet melodies, but the first tune had not been finished when an old-looking man, about 50 years old, having a game leg and a generally forlorn look, came along and halted in front of the Italian.

"Now, that is sweet," he said after a moment; "carries me right back to the days when me and Hannah sat on the back stoop and squoze hands and told our love."

"Op-er-a muzeek," replied the Italian, smiling at the enthusiasm of his audience.

"Wall, now, but it touches me right here!" continued the man with the game leg, laying his hand on his heart. "I haven't felt so much like cryin' for fourteen years before. Seems zif I heard angels buzzing around in the air."

He rested his game leg on a horse-block, folded his arms, and his look and attitude were those of a man whose heart was filled with sad thoughts and painful memories. Just as the tears were starting to his eyes, the organist moved the stop, increased the speed, and "Captain Jinks" was merrily rattled off.

"Some odder kind of mu-zeek," he explained, and the handle hadn't made four revolutions when the man with the game leg began to smile. Then he pushed his hat over on the side of his head. Then he hitched up his trowsers, smiled some more, exclaimed: "By gum! if that 'ere tune don't just make me hop all over!"

"Good mu-zeek," replied the Italian.

"Good! Why, the darned tune is heavenly! I believe if I was dyin' it would stand me on end! I'd give a billion dollars if Hannah was alive and could hear that!"

He stepped out, spit on his hands, and then waltzed up and down on the flags, his game leg flopping around like a loose weather-board and his hoarse voice bawling:

"Ham Cabding Jinks
Her oss marides."

While he was doing his level best the musician touched the stop again, and the tune changed off on to "Birdie, I am Tired Now."

"Ah! that soothes me, that does!" said the old man as he sat down on the horse-block. "That's sunthin' more to touch the heart and make me think of my poor Hannah!"

"Very sweet mu-zeek," remarked the Italian.

"Sweet! Great skies! but it's melting! I've known that tune for a long time, but I never could sing it yet without weeping. If I had a million dollars, I'd buy a hand-organ and play that tune straight along for six months without stopping the crank."

He put his hands over his face and appeared agitated, and the Italian didn't seem to care whether he collected a cent or not. He ground the tune out, touched the stop and remarked:

"Very gran-de mu-zeek dis-a!"

And "Yankee Doodle" rolled from the little square box like sheet lightning sliding down the side of a hay-stack.

"Great Concord!" yelled the man with the game leg as the tune reached "doodle dandy." Hold on a minute till I get this leg under me! Thar—let her come now ——

"Whoopie, poodle, doodle-d!
Hi, sky, doodle dandy!"

And he leaped around, slapped the Italian on the back, threw his hat on the walk, and continued:

"Snair and reptiles! but don't that tune make glory stand right out like mud on a white house! Rah for us!"

The Italian saw that a crowd was gathering, and he broke the tune short off and sailed away on the "Suwanee River."

The first strains of the dear old melody had scarcely left the box when the man with the game leg leaned up against a tree-box, wiped the sweat from his brow and said:

"There's something more to remind me of my lost Hannah! Isn't that pervisions for the hungry soul, though! What strains! What tears! What a bulging of the heart!"

"Very soft mu-zeek," remarked the Italian.

"Soft! My heavens, man! if you'll pass my board I'll travel the whole country over and carry that organ, jist to hear you play that tune!"

He reached out his arms, made motions as if drawing the tune to his breast, and whispered:

"G-lory! When I die, let me die listening to the strains of 'Suwanee River!'"

The organist shouldered his box and moved on, and the man with the game leg leaned up against the fence and wiped his eyes.—Detroit Free Press.

WHEN I AM OLD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

When I am old, the bells that rung
In life's bright morn with chiming tongue,
Shall change, and like a knell be tolled,
When I am old, when I am old.

When I am old, the joys that greet
The pathway of my youthful feet,
The day that dawns so clear and bright,
Shall darken with the shades of night.

The hopes, the doubts, the joys, the fears,
Sharp stytics of my early years;
The woe, the pain, the care, the bliss,
The sneer of scorn, the loving kiss—

The hate, the love, the rest, the strife,
The all that makes this earthly life,
Shall vanish as a tale that's told,
When I am old, when I am old.

How strange it seems! this pulse of fire,
This heart that beats with wild desire,
Shall like the fabric of a dream
Dissolve—we are not what we seem.

When I am old—ah, life grows gray
Too fast. Its morning sinks away—
Its clock, that strikes the hour of noon,
Rings on the startled air too soon.

When I am old, the bells of night
May usher in a morn more bright.
Oh, no! and low those bells be tolled,
When I am old, when I am old!

SPORTS IN DAYS OF YORE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

THE ENGLISH TURF IN 1835.

When the horse was first domesticated is not known, nor which was its native country. It has been claimed that Asia was its native country, while, on the other hand, Africa lays claim to that great distinction. Again, there is no doubt that Europe had indigenous horses, and even little Britain had its own species. America is stated to have no horses indigenous to the country, it being claimed that all the vast herds or droves that roam over the plains of both North and South America are descendants from domesticated horses that escaped from the early Spanish conquerors. In what country the horse was first domesticated is also a matter of dispute, Egypt being claimed as having the first authenticated record, as the Scriptures show that the horse was highly prized in that country. The Scriptures mention the horse, particularly as one highly valued, even giving the colors, as white, black, red, speckled, or bay. In Europe the horse has been, and is now, especially valued both for the labor it does, and for the profits it affords to man. Thousands and thousands of pounds are annually expended in England alone, not only to produce and improve the racing horse and the hunters, but also for the improving of the great dray and cab horses, some of the former being almost elephantine in their size and strength, and also in their movements, planting their feet with as much deliberation and certainty as that mammoth creature, while the cab-horses were then almost models of beauty and speed.

When horse-racing first commenced is also uncertain, but it is pretty evident that horse domestication and horse-racing took place at almost the same time. Man is a creature of emulation and envy. If Abel had a horse that was swift, and Cain had one that was not so swift, and they wished to reach a certain place as soon as possible, the former would urge on his animal, and the latter, finding his left in the background, would endeavor next to obtain something that would equal Abel's horse, if it did not surpass it. Thus would commence horse-training and culture, and as a matter of fact horse-racing would come into play. We know that the early Greeks and Romans indulged in this noble sport, their chariot races being one of their favorite pastimes. Other parts of Europe also took a hand in it, but to England belongs the glory of being the country that has done more than all the rest of the world together to make the horse what it is—next to man, God's noblest work. The royal family has been liberal patrons of the turf, Charles II taking great delight in it, making Newmarket his favorite spot, which rose to the distinction of being the head centre of the turf. This town has a large number of training stables, which take an immense number of trainers, jockeys, stable-boys, hangers-on, etc., quite enough to make a respectable army. Verily, these stable-boys and hangers-on are the wildest specimens of humanity that the eye or ear of man was ever inflicted with. Oaths and curses fairly pollute the air. All Baxter street, Five Points, and the docks of New York combined would not produce filth enough to counterbalance the ordinary talk of one of these stables.

The chief meetings in England in 1835 were the Newmarket Craven at Newmarket, the principal stakes being the Craven Stakes of 10sovs. each; the twenty-first Riddlesworth Stakes of 200sovs. each; the second year of Tuesday's Riddlesworth Stakes of 200sovs. each; the Oatlands Stakes of 200sovs. each; Sweepstakes of 100sovs. each, for three-year-olds (each taking place during the meeting); the St. James Club Stakes of 100sovs. each; Subscription Plate of £50 (two of them); the Chesterfield Dinner Stakes of 200sovs. each; the Bildeston Dinner Stakes of 100 sovs. each; Sweepstakes of 150sovs. each (two of them); the Forfeit Class of the Oatland Stakes; the Grosvenor-square Stakes of 100sovs. each; the Port Stakes of 100sovs. each; Sweepstakes of 50sovs. each; Sweepstakes of 100sovs. each (three of them); the Scrub Stakes of 100sovs. each; a Produce Match; a Post Match; and a match between Mr. Payne's b. c. Skimmer and Lord Lichfield's g. g. Gab, making in all twenty-eight matches, of which two were walked over, and four received forfeit. The Craven had twelve subs. and nine starters; the Hamilton Sweepstakes, each, for three and four-year-olds, had eighteen subs., and no less than sixteen of these started; the Monday's Riddlesworth, sixteen subs. and five starters; Tuesday's Riddlesworth, twelve subs. and four starters; Oatland Stakes, eleven subs. and five starters; the Sweepstakes of 50sovs. each, for fillies, sixteen subs. and five starters; while the Subscription Plate had no less than ten subs.

In looking over the winning owners, we find that Mr. Batson, the eccentric owner of the wonderful Plenipotentiary, won the Craven Sweepstakes of 10sovs., Subscription Plate of £50, and the Port Stakes; Lord Tavistock, the Twenty-first Riddlesworth Sweepstakes of 100sovs. and one of 50sovs.; Lord Oxford, sweepstakes of 100sovs.; the Chesterfield Dinner Stakes and a sweepstakes of 150sovs.; Lord Jersey, Tuesday's Riddlesworth and a sweepstakes of 100sovs.; Mr. Forth, a sweepstakes of 10sovs.; Mr. Copeland, one of 50sovs.; Lord Strathdrake, the Trial Produce Match; Mr. Walker, a sweepstakes of 100sovs.; Mr. Cookes, the Scrub Stakes of 100sovs.; Col. Peel, a sweepstakes of 10sovs.; Lord Chesterfield, one of 10sovs.; Mr. Wreford, one of 150sovs.; Mr. W. Richardson, the Oatland Stakes; the Duke of Cleveland, the St. James Club Stakes; Mr. Payne, a match; Mr. Pettitt, the Bildeston Dinner Stakes; Mr. Wyndham, the Forfeit Class of Oatland Stakes; the Duke of Grafton, the Post Match; Lord Verulam, the Grosvenor-square Stakes; and Lord Lowther, the Subscription Plate of £50.

Among the successful jockeys, we find Jimmy Robinson, the winner of Monday's and Tuesday's Riddlesworth, the Subscription Plate of £50, a sweepstake of 50sovs. and one of 100sovs.; Nat Flatman, the Craven Stakes, Chesterfield Dinner Stakes, two sweepstakes of 100sovs. and a match; Will Scott, Forfeit Class of Gatland Stakes, a sweepstakes of 100sovs. and one of 10sovs.; John Day, the St. James Club Stakes and a sweepstakes of 150sovs.; Arthur Pavis, a sweepstakes of 100sovs.; Frank Boyce, the Produce Match; P. Connelly, the Grosvenor-square Stakes; Sam Rogers, a sweepstakes of 50 sovs.; Wm. Wheatley, a Subscription Plate of £50; H. Wright, the Oatland Stakes; and Twitchett, a sweepstakes of 10sovs.

Of the horses, Plenipotentiary started thrice, winning each time; Oak Apple, the same; Lucifer twice, winning once; Haphazard twice, winning both; Luminary twice, winning once. It also brought out the following that started in the great Derby: Ascot, who won the 150sov. Sweepstakes; Ibrahim, winner of the Tuesday's Riddlesworth and 100sov. Sweepstakes; Mr. Pettit's Ibraham, winner of the Bildeston Dinner Stakes; Duke of Rutland's b. c. by Catton out of Charlotta, a filly of the Oak fillies, Bodice, winner of a 100sov. sweepstakes; Warrest, winner of a 150sov. sweepstakes; Mr. Greatrex's b. f. by Camel out of Martha, not placed in the 10sov. sweepstakes won by Lucifer. Lord Orford started seven times, winning thrice, and second three times; Lord Exeter six times, winning none; Mr. Batson six times, winning four, second twice; Col. Peel five times, winning once; Lord Chesterfield four times, winning once.

England, as everyone knows, is a very small country, embracing only 50,923 square miles, about equal to the State of Iowa, yet in this small space upwards of one hundred and forty-four racing meetings took place during 1835. These are not all important meetings, yet the prizes offered generally amount to a pretty square sum.

The first of the important meetings takes place at Newmarket, and is called the Newmarket Craven Meeting. This town is situated partly in Cambridgeshire and partly in Suffolkshire, thirteen miles eastnortheast of the city of Cambridge. This is the great centre of the turf, no less than seven meetings taking place annually: Craven, First Spring, Second Spring, July, First October, Second October, and the Houghton. The first of these—the Craven—is one of the most important of all meetings, as from this some estimate may be made of the probabilities of the Derby winner. Here congregate all the followers of the turf, and the points of the various animals are criticised by the knowing ones, who form their books and bets from the performances of the contestants at this meeting.

The Craven commenced in 1835 on April 20. The first race was for the Craven Stakes, for all ages. For this the Derby winner of the previous year, Plenipotentiary, Nonsense, Shillelah, Glaucus, and other horses of less note were entered. That fine horse Plenipotentiary—and a better or truer horse never existed—won without an exertion. The next great race of this day was the "Twenty-first Riddlesworth Stakes of 200sovs. each," won by Lord Tavistock's b. f. Oak Apple, without being in the least hard pressed. A singular fact about this filly was that her dam, Mona, was not thoroughbred, her dam being unknown. This is an unpardonable sin with the turfites; for, no matter how well the animal may do, if she has not the blue blood she is tabooed. After this fine race of hers, the general regret was that Oak Apple had not been entered in the race, for she would, no doubt, have given the Queen a hard push for the stakes. The third important race was the "Second Year of the Tuesday's Riddlesworth Stakes, of 200sovs. each." This brought out the Derby favorite Ibrahim, who was freely backed six to one on him. This was a much closer race than either of the others, the winner only landing at the score two lengths ahead, and then only won by the superior riding of Jimmy Robinson, the greatest jockey of them all, with a plentiful shower of whalebone and steel. Ibrahim, one of Lord Jersey's string and the winner of the above race, was a brown colt by Sultan, out of Sister to Cobweb, the winner of the Oaks in 1824. He was a very lazy horse to start, requiring much of steel to start his heels, and, when in motion, had a peculiar way of throwing his forefeet that was anyway but agreeable to look at; but, for all that, he was a very lucky horse, and brought in the pounds freely to his noble master. Next we come to the "Oakland Stakes of 50sovs. each." This was won by Lady De Grey, after an exciting race, by a neck only. Pavis would have won had he not ran out of the course about twenty yards in the last fifty. This deviation by Paris was a perfect godsend to the backers of the Lady, who supported her heavily at five to four on her, while Paris was rated at ten to one against. Next on the programme comes the "St. James Club Stakes of 100sovs. each." This was another exciting race, and was finally won by Nanton by a length; but whether it was won by the superior speed of Newton, or whether John Day's muscular power of arm and legs was superior to Nat. Flatman's, was and still is a conjecture. The "Subscription Plate of £50" was another soft thing for the "phenomenon" Plenipotentiary. The "Chesterfield Dinner Stakes of 200sovs. each" had eight subs. and three starters. One of the starters, Bosphorus, fell and broke his near foreleg; the other two, Stargazer and Burden, making a dead heat of it, and then divided the money. "The Bildeston Dinner Stakes" was a walk-over for Mr. Petitt's Ibraham. The sweepstakes for 100sovs. each was won easily by Lord Jersey's Ibrahim. The sweepstakes for 150sovs. each brought forth another Derby favorite, Lord Oxford's little bay colt Ascot, who won without much exertion. Another sweepstakes of 150sovs. each for fillies brought out two Oak entries, Waresti and Madame De Jeck. The latter, although a favorite at five to one on her, was beaten by Waresti, although the latter only gained ninth place in the Oaks. The Grosvenor-square Stakes of 100sovs. each was won by Perrot; the Subscription Plate of £50, by Lord Lowther's Reveller colt; and the Port Stakes of 100 sovs. was a walk-over for Plenipotentiary. This ended the great Craven Meeting for 1835, and afforded ample grounds for the knowing ones to discuss the merits and demerits of the Derby, Oaks and St. Leger entries.

The betting during May on the favorites for the Derby was on the first four—Mundig, 50 to 1 against; Ascot, 11 to 2 against; Ibrahim, 10 to 3 against, and Silenus, 9 to 1 against. For the Oaks: Queen of Trumps, not called; Preserve, 3 to 1 against; Bodice, 10 to 1 against; and Barbara Ball, not called. These figures were of course changed before the meeting, as several other large meetings took place before, which gave some of the horses a chance to let out a few points, some of them showing a wast improvement on their Craven running. The sports of the turf had now opened, and all interested were on the qui vive for the next great meeting, which also took place at Newmarket, and was called the Newmarket First Spring Meeting.

NEW PLAYS IN ENGLAND AND FRANCE

"LA GRAND MAMAN,"

a new four-act comedy by Edward Cabot, was brought out at the Theatre Francais, Paris, May 17, and Galignani thus describes the plot: "This grandmother is a marquise who suffers in her old age from a serious family affliction. Her daughter had married Count de Brianne, a gentleman of good family, with whom she had never harmonized. The husband and wife have separated by mutual consent, for reasons which are not very clearly explained in the piece, but which may be summed up in the stereotyped phrase 'incompatibility of temper.' Such, however, is the situation—a disunited household, a mother-in-law in grief, and a son bearing the penalty of this regrettable division. This last, named Armand, is a promising young man, but placed in a disagreeable and embarrassing situation by the dissension in his family. He is in love with Mlle. Eudola, the daughter of M. Casthel, and wishes to marry her, as he is beloved in return; but Madame Casthel, a strait-laced and prudish woman, opposes the match on account of the equivocal position of the father and mother of the suitor. The Count and Countess are far from coming to an arrangement which would reconcile every thing and bring back happiness to the family. Law proceedings are coming on before the courts, with the object of effecting a definitive separation, and the imminence of that danger complicates the young man's trouble. During a fete he hears some very disparaging words pronounced against the Countess by a Mr. Gunnerfeldt, impertinent coxcomb, who had not reflected on the consequence of the insult to which his heedlessness had given utterance. Armand resents the affront, and demands to avenge, sword in hand, the honor of his mother so aspersed. But the doubt against which he struggles is not dissipated. He cannot disguise the state of his mind from the Countess, who is subjected by his frankness to a cruel ordeal. She revolts, however, against the odious suspicion expressed by Armand and the grandmother, who arrives in the middle of the scene and discovers the fatal secret, utters a cry of anguish. 'Your mother!' she exclaims, "your mother is the most honest and purest of women! You are going to fight a duel! Do so; I am not the person to prevent you. Fight, my child, in the name of your mother and her honor, and in that of me who love you, defend yourself!" This scene is exceedingly striking; it produced a great effect, and Madame Arnold-Plessy was really admirable in it. The Count, however, knows nothing of what is going on. He is, in fact, a very unfortunate personage, and lives as a bachelor in his deserted mansion. For the moment he is only occupied with his advocate over the pleadings destined to combat before the tribunals the pretensions of his wife. The son comes to see him, tries to effect a reconciliation, and in the course of the conversation an incidental expression arouses the Count's attention, and, going out, he soon learns that Armand is to fight in the morning. The Marquise comes in her turn to see her son-in-law, and addresses herself to the father's heart, declaring that he must prevent the combat at any price, must exhaust all methods of conciliation, must, in a word, save his son. The Count reflects and promises; but he knows, as a man of the world, that the encounter is inevitable. He, however, is on the ground before the son, and takes his place against the antagonist. The denouement may be guessed. The Count is slightly wounded, and we see him reappear leaning on the arm of his wife, whom he will never again quit. The chief characters were entrusted to the following artists: Armand, Pierre Berton; the grandmother, Madame Plessy; the Countess, Mme. Madeleine Broban; the Count, M. Febvre.

"LANCASHIRE LIFE,"

a new drama by Mr. Towers, was the Whitsuntide novelty at the Pavilion Theatre, London, Eng., where it was produced on May 31. The plot is said to be remarkable for the easy

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

WAITING.

'Tis time you drew the curtain, child, and latched the open door,
Put out the useless candle—there is daylight on the moor;
And if he comes back in the day, be it early, be it late,
He'll find the track across the heath that leads him to our gate.

I'll lay me down upon the bed, but I shall wake to hear
The faintest footfall on the grass, or ever it draw near;
'Tis many a year, yet I should know his step as well to-day
As when I checked my sobs to hear its echo die away.

'Tis many a year; I sometimes wish, the while I watch at night,
And feel my heart grow colder with the coming of the light—
I wish my hope could die away as dies the lamp at morn;
I wish I could sit down and weep, and know myself forlorn.

I wish that I could shut my heart as you bar out the sun,
And sit in darkness, yet in peace, until my life were done;
I'm weary listening all the night for what I never hear;
I'm weary counting how the days make up another year.

And if he comes—it is so long, so long I've waited now—
Oh, will he know me with these lines deep traced upon my brow?

He'll look to see a knot of curls, like one that he has kept,
And worn, I know, upon his heart, the while he waked or slept.

He'll look to clasp a little hand that once was firm and white—
(Feel how it shakes, child, just to think if he should come to-night);
From scanty hair, and lined face, and figure shrunk and bent,
How could he guess the beating heart, whose love is all unspent?

It would be worst of all to see him try to hide the pain,
To hear the old fond words, and see the old dear looks again;
To hold his warm brown hand, close pressed, and know at heart the while
That when he turned his face aside, the lips forgot their smile.

I'm fain to give up hope, and rest from weary day and night
In soft gray gloaming, that may end—who knows? in sudden light:
There are some joys most near, they say, when every hope seems past,
And if I cease to watch and wait, my love may come at last.

A FAITHLESS WIFE DETECTED.

The great sensation about the mill this morning, and which produced a good deal of a flutter, was caused by a spruce, finely-built, gay and festive little piece of femininity, who some six months ago left her home, husband and children, and struck out on a little financial pilgrimage of her own, by hypothecating her beauty and other personal charms in the social-evil market. The heroine of this little story is the daughter of a very respectable family in this city, her father occupying a high official position, and residing on Tremont street. She was married in November, 1869, becoming the wife of Wm. H. Farnham, a steady, industrious and reputable young man, who provided her with a good home in Chelsea. For some seven years the husband has been employed in a boot and shoe store on Hanover street, and up to December last had always thought that Albertina was a true and faithful wife. Previously to this time she had become the mother of two children, and she seemed to be very happy at her home. One afternoon, however, in December last, the husband, being indisposed, came home at an early hour. He found Albertina at a table writing, and before her lay a letter directed to Jennie Leverett street. He took up the letter and read it through. It was written in a very cheerful vein, and among other things this naughty little wife said (in the letter) to Jennie that "she had recently met a certain gentleman at a certain place; that they had a good time and that she went home $10 richer than when she left," adding as a sort of doxology that "she had struck a mine, and that she intended to work it." This was enough to satisfy Sir William that his wife was not so "painfully modest" as Bessie Turner was. A scene—a stormy scene—followed the reading of that letter, and when the curtain had dropp ed Albertina gathered up such traps as she wanted, left her home and children, and has never returned. The husband at once filed an application for divorce, and for some four months has resorted to many expedients to get such evidence against her as would be positive on a charge of adultery, and yesterday he caught her. He had learned that she had an attic room at No. 43 Green street. He accordingly hired an attic on the other side of the street where he could look directly into Albertina's room. He had not to look long before he saw his wife enter, accompanied by a man. They at once retired, when Sir William flew out of his hired attic, down into the street, and in less than ten minutes, accompanied by Officers George, Harvey and Sawyer, Mr. Farnham was pounding and kicking at Albertina's attic. He kicked the door open, when the couple were found in her nice young man, who proved to be Chas. E. White, an ex-conductor on the Union road, were arrested. They were locked up for the night, and this morning, waiving an examination, they were held in $500 each for trial upstairs. No bail was offered, and they went sorrowfully off to jail, waltzing along arm-in-arm on the highway of the transgressor.—Boston (Mass.) Herald, May 28.

FREE LOVE, AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

Yesterday afternoon, about the hour of 4 o'clock, a slight sensation was created on Bush street, below Kearny, by the arrest of Mrs. Martha O. Loomis, and the report that she had attempted to shoot Colonel W. H. L. Barnes. Rumor has it that, meeting the gentleman, she held a brief parley with him, and then made a rapid movement, as if to draw a pistol from her pocket; but this was prevented by the intervention of her overakirt, as well as by the rapidity of the Colonel's movements. He seized and marched her into a store, where he took the weapon from her pocket and placed her in the custody of Special-officer Evatt, who took her to the City Prison, and charged her with assault with a deadly weapon. This proceeding on the part of Mrs. Loomis is understood to have reference to her daughter, Miss Georgie Loomis, a young girl, who became well known of late years as a danseuse, as well as from the fact that her mother, despite her tender years, introduced her into the society of Free Lovers, Rose Mackinley and other teachers of the doctrine of free love, to which Mrs. Loomis herself gave a hearty adherence. It has been currently reported that Miss Georgie became an apt pupil of these Priestesses of Progress, and progressed very rapidly under their teachings. She is now living in this city, but not with her mother. What figure Colonel Barnes cut in the matter we do not know, but we think it very likely that he will be able to show that the attack upon him was utterly without justification. The infuriated female, armed with her revolver, roaming about in search of a victim, is becoming too common in our streets; the emotional shooting is getting to be rather monotonous. It is about time that it should be stopped. Within the past year there have been half a dozen attempted assassinations in this city, which were not followed by punishment. Wouldn't it be well to vary the thing by enforcing the law against all disturbers of the public peace?—San Francisco Alta Californian, May 25.

HAVANA WOMEN.—Speaking of Havana society, a writer in Lippincott's Magazine says: "The ugliness of the women amounts to a vice, and is unredeemed by any quality such as sometimes palliates plainness of features. I cried aloud for the beautiful Cuban, but in vain. I am assured that she exists. I am told, 'My dear fellow, you never made a greater mistake in your life.' am pooh-poohed in various ways, but I cannot find her. I hear it said that, owing to the political chaos here, she has retired from public view; but it is not denied that she will go to the carnival and the opera. I was warned not to expect her at the ball in Alfonso's honor at the Spanish Club, and certainly it was a timely warning. Fancy a long hall of colored marble pillars running the length of it, forming arcades; balconies on both sides hanging over the streets, and full of young men smoking cigarettes, men parading up and down the hall and queering the women, who were all seated—two rows of them, hundreds altogether—seriously contemplating the male procession; enameled, powdered, attired in the wealth of the Indies, saying nothing, doing nothing, not smiling nor blinking, just sitting there, in awful array of hideousness. The band struck up and the dancing began. I remained long enough to lose in the music the horrible impression of the opening scene, and then hurried home. At the opera and carnival it is not so positively unendurable; but a handsome face, or a pretty face, or even an intelligent, expressive face, I have not seen in a woman in Havana; and at this season of the year, if ever, Havana is Cuba. I don't condemn—I merely give my luck."

A COLORED BUSHMAN.—One of our late justices of the peace, a negro called one bright morning upon his counselor and requested him to prosecute two colored damsels who, he said, had attacked his wife with knives, with the firm intention of making him a bereaved widower. The attorney caused the arrest of both women, on the affidavit sworn to by his client. The day the case was fixed for trial the talented magistrate appeared in court arrayed in his finest broadcloth, bearing on his manly arm his weaker half. The case was called up, and, after having examined the assaulted weak one testified that she was the judge's legal wife. The first prisoner, upon being questioned, claimed the same rights, and so did the second. The astonished attorney called the prosecuting magistrate aside, and said to him: "——, what do you think of the audacity of these women claiming to be your wives?" "Well, Mr. ——," said he, "that's so." "What! you married three three women?" "Yes, sir. Well, to tell you the truth, Mr. Attorney, I just married them for to keep peace in the family." It is useless to say that when the presiding magistrate heard of this, the justice was severely reprimanded and his many wives were dismissed.—New Orleans (La.) Picayune, May 26.

RIGHT OF A DIVORCED MAN TO MARRY.—A somewhat singular case, involving the force of Connecticut divorce-laws, was before the Superior Court in Worcester, Mass., May 27. It appears, according to The Norwich (Ct.) Bulletin, that the first wife of Dr. Lyman A. Abbott procured a divorce from him in the Massachusetts courts six years ago, he being a resident of Connecticut at the time. The following year he contracted marriage with another woman in Worcester, where he has since resided, and an indictment for polygamy was found against him. The prosecution held that, according to the laws of Massachusetts, Abbott had no right to marry again. It was claimed in defense, however, that he was so entitled by the revised statutes of Connecticut, of which State he was a bona-fide resident at the time of the divorce, and that he brought this status or acquired right with him when he subsequently moved to Worcester. The defense was sustained by the Court, on the ground that the divorce court which separated the first wife must have known Abbott's privilege as a Connecticut man, and the Massachusetts statutory prohibition of a second marriage without leave clearly excepted instances like this.

A WOMAN PASSING AS A MAN FOR THIRTEEN YEARS.—The Warrington (Eng.) Guardian states that a woman named Elizabeth Taylor appeared before the Warrington bench of magistrates on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. She appeared in the dock in male attire, and the chief constable, in detailing some of her antecedents, stated that she was the daughter of a gentleman who formerly lived at Penketh, near Warrington; she had been married, but her husband was killed twenty-one years ago. She commenced to wear male attire thirteen years ago; was employed as a sailor during the American war, and made several trips from South Wales to the American coast in order to supply the Alabama and blockade runners with coals. She was well known by the names of Happy Ned and Navvie Ned, and for some time past had worked as a laborer on several farms in the neighborhood of Warrington, having so late as the 12th inst. helped to kill thirteen pigs for a farmer at Croft Hall House. She has quite a masculine appearance, and her sex was not suspected until she placed herself within the clutches of the police. She was fined five shillings and costs.

A GRATEFUL WIDOW.—The Solomon City (Kan.) Gazette says: We are in receipt of a note purporting to have been dictated by Mrs. Murray, late widow of the man who was hung two weeks ago for violating the person of a little girl.

MISTER BIRCH.—Coroner says tell the party that hung that Man that they need not fear any trouble his wife hasn't lived with him for the last six Months and then he drove her from home and when he was taken to her she said why didnenot they bury him where he was hung and she considered they had done her a grate favor to hang him for she had got him out of prison once, and supposed he would behave himself and now she did not care what became of him. So Mob dont fear no trouble.

BASEBALL.

PHILADELPHIA vs. HARTFORD.

The Philadelphias, on June 3, by their almost faultless fielding and splendid batting, were credited with a decisive victory over the Hartfords. The game was played at 26th and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, in the presence of about two thousand spectators. The Hartfords were without the services of Mills, their excellent first-base man, he being prevented from playing by reason of his brother's death; Harbridge was substituted at right-field, and Bond played finely at first-base. The Philadelphias presented Fred Treacy—late of the Centennials—in the place of McMullin at left-field. The Philadelphias took the lead at the outset, scoring singles the first two innings, on four clean hits, assisted twice by Burdock's errors; and in the fourth inning, by heavy hitting, they made four more runs—three being earned—McSorley heading off with a three-base hit, and McGeary sending home two more men on a two-base hit. In the sixth inning a two-base hit by Addy earned two more for the Philadelphias, the score then standing eight to nothing in their favor. A fine three-base hit by Remsen, and errors by Snyder and Malone, gave the Hartfords their first run, in the following inning on an error of judgment on Meyerie's part. The Philadelphias, in these two innings, made three more runs on seven clean hits, and thus won a most creditable victory by a score of 11 to 2. The very effective pitching of Fisher, plucky and fine catching of Snyder, and the brilliant short-stopping of Fulmer were the most noteworthy features of the remarkably good fielding of the Philadelphias; the first-base play of Bond being most noticeable on behalf of the Hartfords. The fine batting of McGeary, Murnan, and Malone also deserves mention on behalf of the Philadelphias, York and Harbridge doing the best for the Hartfords.

ATLANTIC vs. T. B. F. U. S.

A large number of spectators assembled at the Trotting Park, Bridgeport, Ct., May 31, to witness a game between the above-named clubs. The T. B.'s labored under the disadvantage of having three crippled players, and their fielding was not up to its usual standard; nevertheless they gave the Brooklynites a close pull, keeping the score down to a low figure. With the exception of several fine catches, neither club displayed any brilliant playing, few runs being earned. The following is the score:

ATLANTIC vs. ARLINGTON.

Some professional nines have a habit of "letting up" in a game when playing with amateur nines, and it is a custom which, in every way, is objectionable. In the first place, the amateurs don't thank them a bit for it; and secondly, the professionals by such play treat their patrons unfairly, as people who pay to see ball-playing expect the nines to do their best. An instance of this kind occurred on June 4, on the Union Grounds, Brooklyn, on the occasion of the game between the Atlantics and the amateur Arlingtons. The latter were destrous of having the professionals "Chicago" them if they could—as they should try to do at all times—as in such case, if the amateurs prevent them, even defeat is no discredit. But when there is a "let up" it is no credit to either nine. In this game the Atlantics allowed the Arlingtons to score 5 unearned runs in the eighth inning by regular boy's play in the field, one of the Arlingtons making a home run; and though he did not touch a base in running named, no notice was taken of it. We leave the score to tell the rest of the story.

PHILADELPHIA vs. NEW HAVEN.

The third championship game between the Philadelphia and New Haven Clubs was played June 3, on the former's grounds at Twenty-fifth and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia. The weather was threatening and the attendance limited. The New Havens presented Sommerville and McGinley—late of the Centennials—in this game, while the Philadelphias substituted Schaffer for Snyder, the latter having sore hands. The game was an uninteresting affair, the Philadelphias in the seventh and ninth innings, by hard hitting, making no less than fifteen runs after chances had been offered to put them out for a couple of runs only. Murnan and Schaffer excelled in fielding for the Quakers; Sommerville and Gould doing the best on behalf of the New Havens. McGeary and McGinley did the best batting for their respective nines.

BOSTON vs. RED STOCKINGS.

On the 31 inst. the champions met the Red Sox of the Mound City, who, contrary to expectation, gave them harder work to win than did their opponents of the day before, even after they got three runs in the first inning off bad errors on the part of the St. Louis players. The Reds made more base-hits than the Bostons, but they were guilty of dangerous fielding errors. In the sixth inning White's thumb was injured, and he went to right-field, McVey taking his place behind the bat, and Franklin, a new man, playing at first.

1 TO 0 AGAIN.

BALTIMORE, June 4, '75.

EDITOR N. Y. CLIPPER.—As there appears to be quite a number of folks who either dispute or who do not understand the mathematical law that 1 is an infinite number of times as great as 0, I herewith propose to demonstrate to all why this proposition is a truism. It is self-evident that 1 is to ½ as 2 is to 1, for 1 is twice as much as ½, and 2 is twice as much as 1. Again: 1 is to ½ as 3 is to 1, for the same reason. The fraction may be constantly diminished and the ratio between it and 1 constantly increased. But let us stop at the fraction one-millionth, and we have: as 1 is to one-millionth, so is 1,000,000 to 1—it takes just one million such fractions to make up the unit 1. But even the one-millionth of a thing is more than nothing at all, therefore 2 must be more than a million times as great as 0. Reduce the fraction to a quadrillionth or a sextillionth, and, unappreciably small as it is, it is still more than 0. Hence the conclusion we must inevitably arrive at is, that 1 is an infinite number of times as great as 0. This is the arithmetic of the case.

However, it sometimes occurs that law is one

THE CLIPPER POST-OFFICE.

☞ A STARRED ENVELOPE, plainly addressed, must be inclosed for each and every letter, and the line of business followed by the party addressed should be given, in order to prevent mistakes.

NOTE.—Professionals and others should bear in mind that by a recent change in the postal laws, all letters, etc., in transit between the United States and Canadas, must be prepaid, otherwise they are not forwarded.

Letters received for week ending 5 P. M., MONDAY, June 7.

TERRE HAUTE LETTERS at the Era office, London, Eng., for Mrs. Maggie Fielding, Alf Burnett and Ernest Stanley.

THE FOLLOWING PROFESSIONALS are notified of letters addressed to them in care of the post-office, Detroit, Mich.: Belle Celeste; H. H. Pogue, side-show "biz;" Jas. Corey, manager; H. M. Williams of Larne's Op. Co.; C. H. Scott Jr., S. F. Trusler, W. H. Mitchell, Miss M. DeGrandville and Sarah Hyatt, all of Van Amburgh's Menagerie; and Mrs. J. Pezzuolo, Florence Miles, and Mad. Julien of "Girofle Girofla" Co.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, June 7, 1875.

Things theatrical are slow and uneasy just now. Managers and performers wear a despondent look, while there is a want of confidence, on the part of the public, that betokens sadness and distress for all indoor amusements and hothouse recreations. There is no longer any doubt about the departure of Spring and the coming in of Summer. We see it in the white hats of the men, in the straw what-you-call-'ems of the women, and in the substitution of "cobblers" for hot-spiced coffee. The theatres have suddenly got out of repair, and are closing up with a unanimity seldom witnessed in the managerial ranks. There went out with the tide, last Saturday night, the Lyceum, Booth's, San Francisco Minstrels and Theatre Comique, leaving but few places to stem the battle and the breeze, and to seek the bubble reputation at the public's mouth. Buffalo William took his Kit with him to the Theatre Comique last week; but the people were in no mood for such dreadful deeds as William is wont to favor us with, and so on Saturday his Comique career ended, and the clerk of the establishment no longer resound with the alleged plaudits of an enthusiastic multitude. The thirst for gore does not permeate the interior of our dramatic temples, nor is there that yearning for scalps and things which give such zest to the Indian drama when the frigid ices of Winter enable us to tolerate and endure crime in every guise. So the Buffalonian went out quietly, and the place that knew him once shall know him no more for—this season. In fact, Summer speculations have not, so far, rewarded the enterprise and energy of warm-weather managers. Wallack's Theatre was converted into a variety house last week, with Harrigan and Hart as the probable magnets; but, alas! the affair was a lamentable failure, and "the models of the theatre of comics" looked desirable in its transformation condition, and the fondlesness sympathized deeply with the performers. The variety element has its field, and it had better stick to it. This week an attempt will be made "to revive the drooping fortunes of this house" by the revival of "The Mulligan Guards;" but the "Mulligans" has has had its day, and Harrigan and Hart score an out by this pardonable venture as Summer caterers. Sheridan and Mack tried the same experiment at Wood's Museum last week, but the public abstained, as it were, and the entertainments passed off without vim, and without that evidence of deep-rooted gratification which fills the house with thunders of applause; and so, Sheridan and Mack, with wisdom aforethought, after the experiment has signally failed, cease their managerial aspirations with the current week, and get out of the Wood's while life remains. Another Summer experiment has failed to satisfy the public mind, and the results have not been of those gigantic proportions which had been anticipated when Emerson's Minstrels dropped down upon our cozy little Park Theatre, and set up their bills upon the outer walls. The spec. has not made it necessary for the manageress to start a new bank, nor has it convinced the public that there are better minstrels out of New York than those we have "cherished with a parent's pride." Ah, no! ah, no! "When the blackbirds homeward fly" they will not, perhaps, take with them the most exalted opinion of New York's appreciation of the talent of the great and growing West. Gilmore's first week at the Hippodrome proved to be a big success, there being a large attendance present every evening. But as a cool resort it is a decided failure, for a warmer place of amusement we have never been in. With many gas-lights distributed throughout the establishment, the want of proper air-currents in the lower part of the building, and the close and heated condition of the atmosphere render it anything but a refuge from the Summer heat. It may be a thing of beauty, but it cannot be a joy forever. We listened for the gurgling waters of the cascade on Friday evening last, but the waters were tied up for repairs and the cascade refused to perform. "Our Jim," who says he "didn't went till late, found many ventilators there, but they were all out of place." The boy likewise sarcastically observes that "the place was so cool that it was too much for the waterfall, and froze it hard and fast!" If you want a warm bath, on the European plan, spend an evening at the Hippodrome. The gentlemen who pay so well for the refreshment and liquor privilege would no doubt like to hedge, for the multitude take not kindly to chicken on toast, neither do they affect the high-priced wines offered by the grand duke of Brunswick. Beer, nothing more, nothing less, seems to be most in favor; but whether the dispenser of the same sees his way clear as yet is by no means certain. The attendance has been from five to seven thousand persons at each concert. In London, on May 17, at the Alhambra Palace, there were ninety four thousand persons present! and at the Crystal Palace, same day, to Whit, Monday the number was forty-two thousand!.....Somewhere out in Kentucky a community has rejoiced for a long time past, in the presence among them of Bill Johnson, who was a terror to all showmen, and a scourge of the human family. It may relieve the minds of all traveling show people to learn that sweet William has been shot to death and killed! [Tableau—"Rise up, William Beiley," colored fire, and slow curtain.], Bill appears that at Lafayette, out on the borders, Bill Johnson did give much impudence to one Gruder, and threatened to wipe him from the face of the earth as an encumberer of the ground. Gruder did wax him wroth when he had heard this unchaste and unfriendly language, and did make himself so bold as to venture a remonstrance. William Johnson mildly listened to this Gruder person; was endowed by his recklessness and want of thought; and to show his disapproval of the reckless one's rejoinder, Billy gave him a dreamy look, and, pointing thitherward, as it might be, said: "Git!" This Gruder person—with a courage deserving to be perpetuated in marble, and sent to the Centennial—did adhere him to his native heath, and dared William to do his worst. To say that his pride was deeply wounded, and that his soul bounded with unholy wrath, would be to speak very feebly of Bill Johnson's condition as he listened to the voice of the wretched Gruder. To raise his hand against this person was beneath the dignity of William J., so he merely raised his left foot, mind you, and disdainfully pushed it against the offending Gruder, who went down all of a heap; for William was of a liberal build of person, and his strength, like a mule's, was very strong, especially in his feet. Gruder—with a solicitude for his own safety which should receive the endorsement of all good, law-abiding men—as he lay upon the cold, cold ground, the victim of his emotions and deep disgust, drew from the inmost recesses of his little trousers a well-fixed horse-pistol, instead of a Colt, as many would have preferred, and, without another word, pointed it at the betrayed one as he gloated over the prostrate form of his ignoble prey, and fired! William was so completely taken by surprise that he had no time for anything but, as the life-blood gushed from a gaping wound in his heart, he gave a leap for life, so to speak, but it was a leap into eternity! William Johnson the desperado lay weltering in his gore—dead! Gruder the avenger arose and left the scene; but ere he had gone ten steps he was met by a deputation of citizens and showmen, who presented him with a service of silver for the service he had rendered them, and read to him a series of resolutions which will be handed down to his posterity for all time to come. "But wasn't he arrested for the murder?" Arrested? Why, no; Gruder was looked upon as a benefactor of his race. Thus perished William Johnson!.....Talking about lazy people, they've got an elephant in the Zoo, in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia; and this elephant is so tired all the time that his keepers are compelled to use a derrick to make the disgraceful animal stand. Considering the easy times elephants have, and the good things given them, we think that this behavior on the part of the elephant of Penn's town is a craven nature and a spirit of ingratitude that should be crushed before the Centennial commences. The monkeys, too, should be brought into better discipline than they now exhibit. A few days ago, while a young lady was looking into the cage inclosing a whole brood of these descendants of man, one of them, in sheer drollishness, thrust his malicious paw between the bars of his cage, made a vicious grab at the new twenty-dollar hat worn by the little miss, carried away the entire rigging of the same, leaving but the bare hull on the lady's head, and then sailed aloft, where his associate malefactors were, and together they jabbered and held a jubilee over the spoils, thus adding insult to injury. If these monkeys are not kept in subjection, and are not made to understand the courtesies due to society, then twice ten thousand men will know the reason why.....And this reference to monkeys calls to mind a bill of a "School of Educated Wild Animals" now traveling in the teeming West. To show how what a state of perfection has this combination brought them, we have only to look at the programme, wherein we find the following touching refrain: "Remember, this is not a CIRCUS, but a strictly moral entertainment in every respect!" Now, we are not of a quarrelsome nature; neither do we encourage fighting, in the abstract, as it might be; but this we do say, that if we were a circus, and should come across the track of these educated wild animals, we should demand an ample apology, or make it worse for them than the grasshoppers could do. And we would further remark that every circus owes it to itself to vindicate its character from the assaults of the educated ones by going for, and making it warm for them. We give this hint, merely. We do not advise hostilities, but we repeat that if we were a circus we would cause the gutters to run crimson with the vital sparks of these vile scavengers of the Rocky Mountains. And yet, we do not counsel war!.....Somehow or other, we are in a fault-finding mood to-day. Something must have gone wrong with us. Certain it is, we are not in a comical vein. There's Clara Morris, for instance—she essayed to wear the mantle of Cushman, but she fell by the wayside. She terminated her engagement at Booth's on Saturday night last. It was a failure artistically as well as financially, and she will shortly sail for Europe to recuperate, to her stick and regular nominations in future.....And rumor brings us unauthenticated traces of a reconciliation between Tracy Titus and Mrs. Oates. We are sorry for it. We had hoped better things of this favorite couple. We had hoped that, by the time the Tilton-Beecher trouble had ceased, Mr. and Mrs. Titus' case would have filled up the measure of our desires. But alas! there is but little faith in woman's promises. Perhaps the rumor may turn out to be unfounded.....Crowds are going to Europe—actresses, actors, lecturers, acrobats, and everybody else, but ourselves. They had better stay at home. What have they got to do with Europe, we should like to know? The fare's low! Of course it is—the fare to go is there, and the fare on board. No, no; it's the fashion to go, and they'd go if it cost ten times as much. We'd rather—[all right, let it end here, if you're full.—ED].

CITY SUMMARY.

SHERIDAN & MACK'S VARIETY COMBINATION furnished the entire entertainments presented at Wood's Museum during the past week. The advertising on Monday brought a numerous attendance, which subsequently gradually diminished, until at the close of the week a mere handful of people, so to speak, were present. The patrons of this theatre evidently care little for variety entertainments, the highly-seasoned sensational drama better suiting their tastes. The programme included a sketch called "The Lost Child," acted by W. C. Turner and J. H. Herne; Little Carrie Boshell, who performed quite cleverly a song-and-dance called "Pretty as a Picture;" acrobatic feats skillfully performed by the Snow Brothers; a stump-speech by Charles Reed; Sheridan and Mack in their trite act "Who's Dot Knocking on de Outside Gade?" caricatures by W. C. Turner; character songs, with rapid changes of costume, by Archie Jourdan; a Hungarian polka by Miles. Bertha, Marie, Joanna, and Anna; Dutch comicalities by George S. Knight; songs-and-dances by Wayne and Lovely; "The Drunkard's Child," sung by Little Carrie Boshell; and the farce of "The Dutch Justice," by G. S. Knight and the principal members of the company.

Tony Ladies and two gentlemen, recently connected with a comedy company, can be engaged for the Summer season by addressing C. W. Kenyon, as per advertisement.

MRS. J. L. CARHART, first old woman, and J. L. Carhart, second old man, advertise for engagements for the season of 1875-6.

J. FRANK PRAITE played to good houses at the Chestnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, during the week ending June 5, in his impersonation of Si Slocum in C. W. Tayleure's new drama of Western frontier life. The part does not afford much opportunity for histrionic display, but gives Mr. Frayne a chance to show his remarkable skill as a marksman, he performing in the course of the play the feats of shooting an apple from his wife's head, and of cutting a rope with a bullet, thereby rescuing a negro from hanging. A cleverly-trained dog—Jack—renders effective service in the play. Mr. Frayne was supported by a dramatic company including his wife, Master Frankie Frayne, Wm. Davidge Jr., Harry Langdon, Sam Temple, Mrs. H. A. Crosse, Kate Newton and Mary Maddern. Edward Arnott commences on June 14.

COMMUNICATIONS relating to Geo. L. Fox's "Humpty Dumpty" Troupe should be addressed after June 28 to George H. Tyler, manager, as per advertisement.

ROSINE MCWADE in "Rip Van Winkle" was the attraction at Col. Wood's Museum, Philadelphia, last week. Annie Ward Tiffany gave an excellent rendition of Eda, and Julian Reed and Little Nellie were clever representatives of the children. Howard Paul also appeared in his character sketches, the Guernseiles appearing at the matinee in their "Exposure of Spiritualism." A society-comedy entitled "Wedlock" will be produced this week. Rollin Howard commences an engagement June 14 in his new drama of "Baffled."

AT FOX'S AMERICAN THEATRE, Philadelphia, during the past week, the novel features were the serio-comic vocalisms of Miss Ida Greenfield, the character songs of W. L. Hirst, and the burlesques of "The Field of the Cloth of Gold," in which Sophie and Irene Worrell and S. B. Villa appeared to much advantage. The Parisian groupings and tableaux also continued to be an attractive portion of the entertainment. On June 7 Hernandez Foster commences an engagement. Agnes Sutherland, Clara May, Lotta Edwards, Miles Morris, J. K. Campbell and Master Charley being also added to the already large company.

LAWRENCE BARRETT and family are to pass the Summer at Cohasset, Mass.

THE MISSES CAMERON gave a matinee performance at the Portland (Me.) Museum on June 3, and left for New York 3.

BOOTH'S THEATRE was closed for the season after the performances of June 5. "Camille" was the attraction during the week, and in the title role Miss Clara Morris appeared to much greater advantage than hitherto during the present engagement. Charles R. Thorne, Jr. (who was erroneously announced upon the bills and in the advertisements as acting there for the first times, he having previously performed there with Edwin Booth) gave a manly and noble interpretation of the part of Armand Duval, winning enthusiastic applause during the fourth act. Claude Burroughs of the Union-square Theatre company gave a quiet and gentlemanly performance of Gaston. Miss Marion Sackett, another newcomer, was quite satisfactory as Nichette, and the other characters were evenly acted by members of the regular company. On the evening of the day when the great Masonic procession took place—Wednesday—Harry Weaver was so overcome by his "arduous duties" during the day as to be unable to appear, and Joseph Whelelock on that evening assumed the character of Mons. Duval at very short notice, and saved the performances from an abrupt termination. T. J. Hind acted that part on Thursday evening and during the remainder of the week. Attendance light. Miss Morris' engagement was pecuniarily a failure.

KANAGLEE CHAMPAIN WILKINSON of Boston, Mass., was in town on June 4. He had been passing a few days at Long Branch, N. J., a guest of Manager Henderson.

MISS LILLIE WILKINSON will star the coming season, producing "Little Sunshine," "The Far West," and other sensation specialties, and can be addressed through her agent, Col. T. Allston Brown. She will open at Wood's Museum, New York, June 14.

"ADRIFT OR THE WORLD," a sensational drama for lady stars, is advertised by the authoress, Miss Adah M. Howard, who can be addressed care of this office.

A. H. SHELDON, in his drama of "Wealth and Crime," opens at the Jersey City Opera-house June 7.

COPIES of the drama of "Rose Michel" can be obtained of W. A. R., who advertises.

MRS. F. W. LANDER, supported by Frank Lawlor's company, dedicated Music Hall recently erected in Erie, Pa., on May 31, by a performance of "Elizabeth." They continued to perform there during the remainder of the week, and closed their traveling season on June 5.

MISS SUSAN DENIN, supported by her dramatic company, is to perform at Akron, O., June 7, 8, Crestline 9, 10, Mansfield 11, 12. The company during the Summer season will include (besides Miss Denin) Miss Sadie Jackson, Mrs. G. A. Florence, Miss Nettie Kellogg, Messrs. C. W. Taylor, R. M. Oglesby, E. F. Knowles, B. R. Graham, H. N. Wilson, Sid. S. Hicks, John Whiteley and T. Morris.

MISS NANNIE ROBERTS has joined E. A. McDowell's company to play Mona in "The Shaughraun."

MISS CLARA MORRIS and Charles R. Thorne Jr., supported by a dramatic company, are to perform in "Camille" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, L. I., June 16.

WALTER A. DONALDSON, who can be addressed care of this office, is prepared to negotiate with managers for the production of his drama of "Australia," which has been reconstructed and rewritten.

HANLON'S OPERA-HOUSE, Wheeling, W. Va., will be managed this and next season by the proprietor, James Hamilton, who will play first-class combinations or stars, supporting them with a stock company from the Pittsburg Opera-house.

GEO. GIDDENS, principal low comedian, can be addressed through his agents, Simmonds & Wall.

MUSICAL NOTES.—Miss Clara Louise Kellogg arrived in the city during the past week, and is stopping at the Clarendon.....Manager Strakosch, it is announced, will bring the Russian prima-donna, Mlle. Seloucca, also Brignoli, Nebbi-Bettini, and several of the leading members of Mapleson's company as a support for Mlle. Tietjens in her tour through this country next Fall.....Mlle. Geoffroy and the company of French operabouffe artists lately at the Lyceum Theatre give a representation of "Girofle-Girofla" at the Terrace-garden Theatre June 11.....LEONORE MORTON arrived in town during the past week.

JOHN T. RAYMOND, Maurice Grau, C. A. Chizzola, Mrs. Rousby and Mrs. Jennie Van Zandt and sister sailed for Europe in the steamship Germanic on June 5.

THE MISSES EMILY SOLDENE, Annie Wood, Vesey and Robson returned to England on June 5 in the steamship Queen. Miss Soldene contemplates returning in the Fall with a newly organized company.

BILLY AND MAGGIE RAY in Ethiopian specialties, and J. W. Wallace in a sensational drama entitled "Brought to Light," were the salient features at the Bowery Opera-house during the past week. The attendance was moderate.

J. H. STODDART, an excellent character actor, has been engaged to fill F. F. Mackay's position in the company at the Union-square Theatre for the season of 1875-6.

THE AVERAGE ATTENDANCE has continued large at the Fifth-avenue Theatre since our last report, and "The Big Bonanza" is still the loadstone.

OWEN FAWCETT left on June 3 for Flat Rock, Mich., where he has a Summer residence. He will rejoin Daly's Fifth-avenue Company in Chicago, Ill., on June 14, and accompany them to California.

TOM LEVEY has gone to Detroit, Mich., to superintend the completing of Whitney's new Opera-house.

G. OPERTI is to lead the orchestra at Booth's Theatre during the season of 1875-6, he having signed a contract with the managers on June 1.

FRANK MAYO was in town during the past week.

MISS CLARA MORRIS left Europe on June 19.

AT W. W. TILLOTSON'S benefit, at Booth's Theatre, on June 3, the attendance was fair, and the performances included "Blackeyed Susan," with George Rignold as William; a recitation by Miss Jeffreys-Lewis; the fourth act of "Camille," with Miss Clara Morris and Charles R. Thorne Jr. in the leading roles; Mrs. J. H. Hackett, who made her debut on the metropolitan stage, acting the sleep-walking scene of Lady Macbeth; and "P. P., or the Man and the Tiger," with George Clarkeas Splasher.

Managers, Agents, Doorkeepers, and Others

Are respectfully requested not to extend any courtesies or information to persons claiming to be correspondents of THE NEW YORK CLIPPER, unless they can exhibit a card of a LIGHT PINK COLOR, with an engraving of THE CLIPPER BUILDING on one side, and on the other the names of the city, correspondent, etc., signed by the proprietor of the paper, with the stamp of the office, and date of March 1, 1875, affixed thereunto, each card running for six months. If such authorized correspondent is supplied with a card of the above description, and has no authority to use any other upon our behalf. Managers will save themselves from imposition by demanding the production of said card, and refusing to accept any excuse whatever for its non-production. The card is not transferable; and, if it be presented by any person other than the one whose name it has, managers are requested to confer a favor if they will retain it and mail it to this office.

Persons applying for the position of correspondent are respectfully requested to consider SILENCE A NEGATIVE.

MRS. ETTIE HENDERSON publishes a card in another column, informing managers that Miss Lillie Wilkinson, having purchased copies of "Little Sunshine" and "The Far West," is authorized to produce those pieces in the United States and Canada.

MISS LILLIE WILKINSON will star the coming season, producing "Little Sunshine," "The Far West," and other sensation specialties, and can be addressed through her agent, Col. T. Allston Brown. She will open at Wood's Museum, New York, June 14.

"ADRIFT OR THE WORLD," a sensational drama for lady stars, is advertised by the authoress, Miss Adah M. Howard, who can be addressed care of this office.

A. H. SHELDON, in his drama of "Wealth and Crime," opens at the Jersey City Opera-house June 7.

COPIES of the drama of "Rose Michel" can be obtained of W. A. R., who advertises.

MRS. F. W. LANDER, supported by Frank Lawlor's company, dedicated Music Hall recently erected in Erie, Pa., on May 31, by a performance of "Elizabeth." They continued to perform there during the remainder of the week, and closed their traveling season on June 5.

MISS SUSAN DENIN, supported by her dramatic company, is to perform at Akron, O., June 7, 8, Crestline 9, 10, Mansfield 11, 12. The company during the Summer season will include (besides Miss Denin) Miss Sadie Jackson, Mrs. G. A. Florence, Miss Nettie Kellogg, Messrs. C. W. Taylor, R. M. Oglesby, E. F. Knowles, B. R. Graham, H. N. Wilson, Sid. S. Hicks, John Whiteley and T. Morris.

MISS NANNIE ROBERTS has joined E. A. McDowell's company to play Mona in "The Shaughraun."

MISS CLARA MORRIS and Charles R. Thorne Jr., supported by a dramatic company, are to perform in "Camille" at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, L. I., June 16.

WALTER A. DONALDSON, who can be addressed care of this office, is prepared to negotiate with managers for the production of his drama of "Australia," which has been reconstructed and rewritten.

HANLON'S OPERA-HOUSE, Wheeling, W. Va., will be managed this and next season by the proprietor, James Hamilton, who will play first-class combinations or stars, supporting them with a stock company from the Pittsburg Opera-house.

GEO. GIDDENS, principal low comedian, can be addressed through his agents, Simmonds & Wall.

Tony Ladies and two gentlemen, recently connected with a comedy company, can be engaged for the Summer season by addressing C. W. Kenyon, as per advertisement.

MRS. J. L. CARHART, first old woman, and J. L. Carhart, second old man

MISS FANNIE FLORENCE, Prof. Francis, Jennie Eagan, and H. W. Eagan were the new arrivals at the Vaudeville Theatre, Louisville, Ky., May 31, and, in connection with the already large company, gave a very entertaining performance. Our correspondent says: "Miss Jennie Eagan first appeared in a skipping-rope dance, and, later in the evening, assisted by Josie Farron, in a double dance, both of which were well executed. The serio-comic vocalism of Miss Florence won deserved applause. 'The Skidmore Guards,' sung by her for the first time in this city, had to be repeated three times. Hugh Eagan, a capital performer, appeared to much advantage as Mons. Coupee in 'La Maitre de Dance.' The juggling and plate-spinning of Prof. Francis was good. Notwithstanding the warm weather, business has been fair. Julia Davenport is the only new arrival billed for June 7. The Henri Family depart June 5 for St. Louis.....Tony Pastor's Combination appeared at Masonic Temple 4, 5.

LESTER, ALLEN, SMITH AND WALDRON, the quartet of specialty artists now traveling together, complete the third and last week of their engagement at the Metropolitan Theatre, New York, June 12. They open for the Fall and Winter season at St Louis, Mo., Sept. 5, and can be engaged for open dates. Address care of this office.

LOTTIE GRANT, vocalist, whose address find elsewhere, is now in the sixth week of her engagement at Fox's American Theatre, Philadelphia.

THE OPENING of the Theatre Comique, Long Branch, N. J., advertised on an outside page, has been postponed from June 21 to Saturday, June 26.

CAMPBELL AND BARR, specialty artists, in their several acts, mentioned in their advertisement, are open for engagements at first-class variety theatres.

THE ATLANTIC VARIETIES, Brooklyn, N. Y., is offered for sale. See James Welch's card.

E. S. WASHBURNE'S LAST SENSATION is billed at Biddeford, Me., June 8, Portland 9.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS commenced a two weeks' engagement at the Academy of Music, Chicago, Ill., May 31, and, though the house has not been crowded on any occasion as yet, the attendance has been large, and the audiences have been remarkably enthusiastic. Mr. Haverly may well pride himself on having as fine a minstrel organization as ever appeared in Chicago. The first part—introducing seventeen people—was excellent. The ballads of Albert Welling, Thos. B. Dixon and Henry Welling were superbly rendered, and songs and jokes of George Wilson and Milt. Barlow were fresh, original, and gotten off in a style both laughable and ludicrous. Nearly every ballad, song and joke elicited a double encore the opening night, and ere the first part was concluded it was plain to be seen that the void left by the retirement of the Emerson Minstrels had been most ably filled. If the first part was good, the olio was better. Burton Stanley was exceedingly clever in his burlesque impersonations, and received a triple encore. The old but laughable sketch of "Dr. Smith's Studio" was splendidly acted by Barlow, Dixon and J. W. Freeth. Primrose and West appeared in a double song-and-dance that has seldom been excelled, and later in the evening they executed a double clog, which for time, execution and difficult steps, was the finest we have ever witnessed. "The California Quartet," Edwin French's banjo-solo, and Milt. Barlow's old-man impersonations, were all excellent. The performance concluded with D. L. Morris as the Black Dutch Justice, which was very ludicrous. Next (this) week the company will, in addition to the first part, appear in a new drama entitled "Eva, or Reconstructed Uncle Tom's Cabin," by C. R. Gardiner. From recent developments it appears that the play was written expressly for Haverly's Minstrels some time ago, and, if it plays as well as it reads, they will produce it on their Southern trip.....Billy Manning was the recipient of a benefit at the Adelphi Theatre on Sunday evening, May 30, which proved to be a brilliant affair. The benefit was given under the auspices of Messrs. Dan O'Hara, City Treasurer, and Egbert Jamieson. Every member of the Adelphi company appeared, in addition to Mrs. Wm. Manning—formerly known as Molly Williams—who was seen to excellent advantage as Judy O'Trot in "Ireland As It Is;" and Williams and Bowman, very creditable double song-and-dance artists. Mr. Manning will soon start for Hot Springs, Ark., for the benefit of his health which has been very poor for some time past. Letter of June 4.

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS are billed for Dubuque, Ia., June 8, Clinton 9, Davenport 10, Peoria, Ill., 11, Galesburg 12, Burlington, Ia., 14, 15, Keokuk 16, Des Moines 17, Omaha, Neb., 19, 20.

THE MARINE MINSTRELS performed on board of their floating theatre at Mt. Vernon, Ind., June 1, 2, Uniontown, Ky., 3, 4. Otto Pfaffin and John Kiefer, instrumental musicians, joined the company May 26.

THOMAS TAUGHS, the veteran minstrel, who is now in Zanesville, O., in a destitute condition, and prevented from earning a subsistence by reason of injuries received during the late Rebellion, is anxious to obtain the present addresses of the following gentlemen, who served in the 165th Regiment, Duryea's Second Zouaves: Corporal Henry Loomis, of Company E; Captain Inwood, of the same company; and the doctor, whose name Mr. Vaughn cannot remember. If these gentlemen will write to Mr. Vaughn, giving him their present whereabouts, they will do him a great service, as they can materially aid him in getting a pension from our Government. Address him at Zanesville, O.

KATE LOGAN'S New York Serenaders performed at Westboro, Mass., June 5. Route: Leominister 8, Fitchburg 9, Athol 12.

JOHN A. RICKABY is now the agent of Bryant's Minstrels, under the management of Neil Bryant.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS occupied Beethoven Hall, Boston, Mass., the past week. It is such a little while since the same troupe were at the Howard, that it is only necessary to say that they did a good business, and met with favor.

BURGESS' MINSTRELS and London Quartet appeared June 8, 9, at Mechanics' Hall, Montreal, Canada.

SIMMONS' & SLOCUM'S MINSTRELS performed at Reading, Pa., June 4. Lancaster 5. Route: Williamsport 7, Lock Haven 8, Belfont 9, Altoona 10, Harrisburg 11.

CIRCUSES.

W. W. COLE'S N. Y. AND N. O. CIRCUS was at Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 1, Dewitt 2, Clinton 3, Maquoketa 4, Anamosa 5. Route: Monticello 7, Manchester 8, Duluth 9.

THOMAS CLIFFORD and wife left America's Racing Congress and Hippodrome on account of the death of Mr. Clifford's mother, and they are now at their home in Binghamton, N. Y.

HENRY J. NORTH, a son of Levi J. North, and well known in the profession, who has been in the employ of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company, had his left foot badly crushed a short time ago, while uncoupling some cars at Janesville, Wis., where he now is.

JACK HUDSON and a party of six whalemen left San Francisco, Cal., May 29, for a trip up the coast, with the view of capturing, if possible, some sea-lions, which they intend, when caught, bringing to New York.

MELVILLE, MAGINLEY & COOK'S CIRCUS is to show at Little Falls, N. Y., June 7. Canajoharie 8, Fonda 9, Amsterdam 10, Balston Spa, Saratoga, 12.

MILLE. VICTORIA, we are reported to have broken her leg by a fall from the trapeze while performing with Cameron's Oriental Circus, at Biddeford, Me., on May 28, writes us under date of June 4 that her injuries are not so bad as was anticipated. She only bruised her hip, and expects to resume her performances at Bangor, Me., the present week.

"YANKEE" ROBINSON'S Modern Show exhibited in Independence, Iowa, May 31, when an accident happened by the falling of some seats, breaking a limb of one lady, and dislocating a limb of another.

BILL JOHNSON, the man who created the fight with Cooper's Circus last season at La Fayette, Ky., and who for years has been the terror of all shows visiting that place, was shot and killed there about three weeks ago by a man named Grader, who claims that he shot Johnson in self-defense. So delighted was the community at being rid of such a desperado, that Gruder was not even arrested. So states our Louisville correspondent under date of June 3.

GEO. J. GUILFORD has severed his connection with Springer's Royal Cirqzoolodon, by the proprietors of which he is highly recommended, and managers desiring to engage him as press or general agent can address as per advertisement.

FOSTER'S ACCIDENT.—Foster's circus tented at Buffalo, N. Y., May 31. June 1, did an immense business, their tents being crowded. They went to Lockport, Niagara Falls, and thence to Canada.

THE AMERICAN RACING ASSOCIATION is to show at Buffalo again June 14, having once more reorganized. There is a great rivalry between this show and Barnum's, which is billed for 15, 16. De Haven has cut his price down to 25 cents, general admission, and thereby hopes to spoil Barnum's business.

THE EUROPEAN ZOOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION, under the management of the Sells Brothers, is to show at Bridgeport, Ill., June 7, Robinson 8, Merom, Ind., 9, Linton 10, Worthington 11, Bowling Green 12, Brazil 14, Rackville 15, Newport 16, Covington 17, Attica 18, Lafayette 19, thence into Illinois and Iowa. The company has recently been reorganized, and now includes Richard Rivers and family, Ferdinand Tourniare, Fred Runnells, George Castle, Willis Cobb and his troupe of dogs, goats and monkeys; Charles Ewers, Willie Sells, James McGuire, clown; Joel S. Davidson, John Murtz, Frank Perine, Adolph Reisley, the Livingston Brothers, Charles Bartine and wife, Mlle. Carlotta and Little Viola Rivers.

SADLER'S ENGLISH CIRCUS is to show at Pentwater, L. S., Manistee 12, thence through the mineral districts on Lake Superior.

BUEL ROBBINS' CIRCUS exhibited at Janesville, Wis., the home of the genial showman, on May 29, and at the afternoon performance Mrs. Robbins entered the ring, was introduced to the audience, and was presented by the Rev. J. L. Jones, on behalf of the citizens of that city, with an elegant silver tea-set. During the evening performance Capt. Pliny Norcross, a leading lawyer, presented Mr. Buel Robbins, on behalf of numerous friends, with a valuable gold-headed cane. The route of the show is Oregon, Ill., June 7, Polo 8, Sterling 9, Morrison 10. Miles Orton has recovered, and rejoined the show. On May 27 a zebra died. The show has experienced bad weather, but business is reported fair. Charley Brown was injured while leaping on May 29, and was left behind at Janesville.

BARTHOLOMEW'S Trained-animal Exposition opened in St. Louis, Mo., May 27 to fair houses, and has steadily improved in attendance since. The show is quite novel and entertaining, consisting entirely of trained horses, goats, a buffalo and an elk. Mr. B. has wonderful control of his animals, exhibiting them in unusual feats without any labored efforts to compel obedience. With one or two exceptions, all his animals were taken from a wild state and captured at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. The most interesting feature is the cavalry drill of the horses —ten in number—at the word of command. The attention and decorum of these horses are subjects of remark. The matinees are growing quite popular. He will remain several weeks. Letter dated June 4.

ANNIE JONES, the bearded child, can be engaged for a sideshow or museum by applying to advertised address.

A BABY ELEPHANT was ushered into the world at St. Joseph, Mo., on May 31. Its mother travels with Howe's London Circus.

JOHN J. BOGAN sends banjos, bones, and other musical instruments by express C. O. D. Mr. Bogan also advertises to teach the banjo, song-and-dance, and jig dancing.

W. J. COLES advertises that he will give a bonus to secure the position of treasurer with a good hall-show.

ALF. BURNETT shortly starts from Cincinnati, O., on a Summer trip, visiting Paris, Ky., Richmond, Carlisle, Louisville, Shelbyville, Allegheny Mountains, Saratoga, N. Y., Long Branch, N. J., Cape May and Newport, R. I.

A "PANORAMA OF IRELAND, known as" The Harp of Erin," is offered for sale by J. J. Morrissey, who gives the particulars in his card in our business department.

G. H. ROWE of Boston, Mass., has just published the new song and chorus "As the Shadows Cross the Sunlight," price 35c. The orchestral parts, also all classes of orchestral music, all kinds of instruments, instruction-books, etc., can be obtained at his address, advertised elsewhere.

MADAME BLANCHE'S Continental Troupe appeared in tableaux and groupings at Concert Hall, Philadelphia, last week. Miss Florence Santley, W. Horace Bent, James Howard and J. L. Woolsey also appeared in vocal specialties. The attendance was medium.

THE PENNSYLVANIA HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY will give their annual Spring exhibition at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia, June 8 to 11, inclusive.

THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, was well patronised during the week ending June 5. A collection of rare specimens of animals and birds arrived last week from Demarara, where they had been purchased by the American Consul for this institution. Carl Sentz's Orchestra commenced giving concerts on June 1.

PROF. MARTINO, illusionist and ventriloquist, advertises that he is open for engagements.

JAMES H. GILLESPIE, advance agent, whose address find in our advertising department, will be at liberty after July 24.

A YOUNG LADY is wanted to travel as a ticket-agent with a gift-show. Address W. R., as per card.

THE PORTLAND MUSEUM, Portland, Me., which is well stocked with scenery, can be rented by first-class combinations, by the night or week, through James A. Arnold, whose card find in our business department.

A GAS-BALLOON is wanted by Webster, who can be addressed care of this office.

HE IS STILL TRAVELING.—B. H. Hurford, whose nefarious practices we exposed a few weeks ago, has struck the Western country. Our correspondent at Peoria, Ill., informs us that the landlord of the Peoria House in that city told him that "a person stopped at his hotel a few days ago and presented a card bearing the following address: 'B. H. Hurford, special correspondent and agent of THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,' and after remaining three days left without paying his bill." We have no travelling correspondents nor agents, and we have cautioned hotelkeepers and others against this swindler.

J. BRUCE, show-painter, advertises in another column his new studio and his facilities for filling all orders in his line of business.

MAGICAL APPARATUS for the profession is offered for sale by H. Stone & Co. See card.

THE OPERA-HOUSE, Ottawa, Ill., which was destroyed by fire on Dec. 30, 1874, is now being rebuilt by Messrs. Colwell, Clark & Co., who state, through their card in another column, that the interior of their new opera-house will be unsurpassed by that of any opera-house in the State. It will be completed by September 1, and will have a seating capacity of 1,000. The Illinois State Fair will be held at Ottawa, commencing Sept. 13.

TWO BALLOON ASCENSIONS will take place at Philadelphia July 4, when Prof. Wise and his young grandson will ascend in separate balloons. The ascensions will be somewhat novel, from the fact that this will be the first time in the history of ballooning that a grandsire and a grandchild have simultaneously tempted the ether in different balloons.

AMATEUR.

CHARLES BOWSER, a gentleman well known in society in Louisville, Ky., and an amateur actor of more than ordinary ability, was the recipient of a complimentary benefit tendered to him by the Louisville Reading and Musical Club, at Macauley's Theatre, on May 28. Mr. Bowser has announced his intention to become a member of the dramatic profession, and the benefit was tendered to him upon the eve of his departure for New York, where he goes to perfect his studies. The programme consisted of three small farces, in each of which he took the leading part, the Shakespeare Club sustaining the minor characters; and, looked upon in the light of an amateur performance, it was very creditable to all concerned. Mr. Bowser undoubtedly has talent, and, with practical experience, close application to his work, and hard study, may make his mark in the profession he is about to enter. Letter of June 3.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of Wilton, Ct., recently gave a performance of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "The Secret" for the benefit of the Kansas sufferers. The following took part in the performance: J. C. Myers, H. Cooke, E. Sturges, C. Berry, A. Seamore, E. Raymond (a son of John T. Raymond of Col. Sellers fame), M. Browne, the Misses Sarah Berry, Ettie Cannon, Carrie Seamore and Martha Hickock.

THE YOUNG MEN'S LITERARY ASSOCIATION of Baltimore, Md., performed "Richelieu" at Ford's Operahouse, that city, on June 1, before one of the largest houses that have been seen in that building during the season. Wm. Roche attempted the role of Richelieu, and for an amateur did quite well. The other characters were by A. Prevost, F. M. Gobright, Geo. Wagner, Mr. Wise, J. Satterland, E. Mullan, J. C. Murray, W. J. Fox, and the Misses M. Mosher and M. Dulaney.....The Etna Assembly gave an entertainment at the Temperance Temple, June 3, which was well attended. Geo. F. Campbell, Ned. Everhart, Frank Rutledge, Harry Leonard, Harry Lankford, John Atwell, Prof. J. W. Bangert, Harry Fenner, James Wheeler, Ned Spencer, and John Mack were among the participants.

THE GARRICK Dramatic Association of Reading, Pa., has reorganized, and prominent among the members are Messrs. J. B. Harper, B. F. McCoy, M. R. Gehry, Wm. M. Wells and others of the old association. They are making extensive preparations for the next season.

THE WHEATLEY Dramatic Association of Philadelphia tendered a complimentary benefit to Mrs. Chas. Henri on the evening of June 2, when "The French Spy" was produced, with the beneficiary in the title role.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

AN OLD ACTRESS CRIPPLED FOR LIFE.—Mrs. Stoker, nee Miss Eliza Pitt, an actress who made her first bow to a London audience in 1820 at the Adelphi Theatre as Sophia in "Capers at Canterbury," is now lying a helpless and incurable cripple in the Royal Free Hospital. The unfortunate lady, who is 79 years of age, was accidentally knocked down on April 22, and she sustained a fracture of the neck of the thigh-bone, and physicians say that it admits of no cure. She was contemporary with the late Macready, Charles Mathews, elder and younger, and Mme. Celeste.

THE RECEIPTS of the Paris theatres for the year 1874–5 are published. They were (in francs) as follow: Opera, 1,849,312; Gaite, 1,754,985; Porte St. Martin, 1,679,947; Francais, 1,474,927; Opera Comique, 1,037,226; Palais Royal, 991,658; Varietes, 919,717; Chatelet, 764,762; Bouffes, 669,996; Renaissance, 597,317; Gymnase, 585,867; Odeon, 503,384; Folies-dramatiques, 480,015; Ambigu, 350,264; Vaudeville, 330,963; and Lyrique-dramatique, 251,322.

AT THE THEATRE BEAUMARCHAIS a drama by M. Francois Llaunet, entitled "Les Orphelines de Sydenham," was played May 12 for the first time. It is sufficiently interesting, very fairly put on the stage, and by no means badly interpreted. The little house near the Bastile possesses a young company overflowing with zeal, among whom some artists of more than ordinary merit are to be found—notably, Henri Roze, who has appeared at the Ambigu before now with considerable success.

THE DIVORCE CASE of McCord vs. McCord and Coxon was heard in Newcastle, Eng., April 28. The petitioner, a clerk in the custom-house at Newcastle, married the respondent in February, 1870. The respondent was at the time an actress on the Newcastle stage, and continued in the profession contrary to the wishes of her husband. In November, 1872, she separated from him, without assigning any sufficient reason for her conduct, and was subsequently guilty of adultery with the co-respondent. The petitioner admitted that he himself had also been guilty of adultery, but it appeared that the petitioner had condoned it, and that it had in no way conduced to her own misconduct. Mr. Inderwick, Q. C., submitted that under the circumstances of the case the Court would be justified in according to the petitioner the relief for which he prayed; and the Judge took time to consider the matter.

"VOLTAIRE'S WAGER, OR DESPITE THE WORLD," a new play written expressly for Miss Genevieve Ward by the Hon. Lewis Wingfield, was produced for the first time on any stage at the Theatre Royal, Dundee, Scotland, on May 18. The Dundee Advertiser of May 19 speaks of her acting as follows: "It is always a considerable undertaking to produce a new drama for the first time in a provincial theatre, and the management deserves congratulation for the success achieved last night, since much of it was due to the care with which the piece was set on the stage. The Thecla of Miss Genevieve Ward is in every sense of the word a great creation. She has so completely absorbed every phase and mood of the character that she is, while on the stage, transfigured from her natural self into the noble and beauteous ideal of the author. The various situations through which she has to pass demand a versatility of delineation which is rarely found at present on the stage. The gayety of comedy, the tenderness of impassioned love, the vagaries of a fading mind, and the tragic force of a mournful death have all to be suggested to the audience, and are conveyed by Miss Ward with a vividness of expression and a wealth of gesture and action which worked like a spell on the minds of her auditors. In the third act the house fairly rose at the gifted tragedienne, and the success of the piece was conveyed in the cheers which recalled the heroine."

EVELYN BELLEW, a son of the well-known Shakespearian reader, made his first appearance in London, on the Standard Theatre on May 15, acting Hamlet. The Sunday Times reviews his merits as follows: "Considerable interest had been inspired, and the audience included not a few of those known in the world of literature and art. Mr. Bellew has a good face and figure, which are thin and youthful, however, and an expressive eye. To these gifts he adds some knowledge of stage resources. His Hamlet is interesting, accordingly. Practice, however, is wanting to give the young actor an idea how to develop his talents. Most of his innovations are such as he will be himself in future years the first to condemn."

MISS CAMILLE DUBOIS has been playing her original character of Fatima in "Blue Beard" with the Lydia Thompson Troupe, at the Globe Theatre, London, Eng.

EDMON S. CONNER, a well-known American actor, was announced to make his first appearance in England, at the Surrey Theatre, London, on May 22, acting Sir John Falstaff in "Henry IV."

MR. AND MRS. BANDMANN were playing in Leicester, Eng.

OUR LONDON, ENG., advices are up to May 23. An account of the new plays produced in the English and French theatres may be found in another part of this paper. The Whitsuntide entertainments were as follows: At Drury-lane Signor Salvini has been appearing in "Il Gladiatore" and "Othello." Haymarket—"A Fair Encounter," "David Garrick" and "The Serious Family." Saturday "Our American Cousin" was repeated. Princess'—"Round the World in Eighty Days." Adelphi—"Turn Him Out," "Nicholas Nickleby" and "The Bunch of Berries." Lyceum—"A Fish Out of Water" and "Hamlet." Olympic—"Twenty Minutes with a Tiger" and "The Two Orphans." Strand—"An Earnest Appeal," "Weak Woman" and "Intimidad." Vaudeville—"Whirligig," "Our Boys" and "A Fearful Fog." Globe—"East Lynne" and "Blue Beard." St. James's—"A Phenomenon in a Smock Frock," "Trying It On" and "Tom Cobb." Prince of Wales'—"The Merchant of Venice." Holborn—"Maids of Honor," "Hidden Hand" and "Make Yourself at Home." Royalty—"La Perichole" and "Trial by Jury." Court—"Short and Sweet" and "Lady Flora. Criterion—"Girofle-Girofla." Surrey—"Ambition" and "Katharine and Petruchio." Alhambra—"The Artful Dodge," "Chilperic" and a comic ballet. St. George's Hall—Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment. Elephant and Castle—"Quentin Matsys" and "The Ticket-of-leave Woman."

SALVINI'S next character at Drury-lane, it is said, will be Hamlet.

MR. AND MRS. JAMES CARDEN were to commence a week's engagement at West Hartlepool, Eng., May 24.

E. A. SOTHERN is to be a partner with Mr. Buckstone in the future management of the Haymarket Theatre, London, Eng.

HEZEKIAH LINTHICUM BATEMAN was the full name of the late H. L. Bateman, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, London, Eng., and we learn this from a published legal notice referring to the administration of his estate. If his American friends (?) had only known this during his life.

J. K. EMMET concluded an engagement at the Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, Eng., May 22, the fourth fulfilled by him in that theatre.

THE MACBETH FEVER has reached London, and The Figaro comments upon it as follows:

Mr. Henry Irving, the "eminent" one, is to open next season at the Lyceum with "Macbeth." Ah, yes! The "eminent" I would look well in a kilt.

Rignold can take comfort.

NOW THAT SIG. ROSSI is to visit England, Signor Salvini authorizes an announcement that "he will be prepared, and not only prepared but pleased, to play Iago to Rossi's Othello." There is no petty professional jealousy here, you see.

CHARLES WYNDHAM is to act in "Brighton" in the German language in Berlin during the months of August and September. He will be accompanied by Bronson Howard.

J. F. CATHCART is to accompany Barry Sullivan to America.

MRS. HUDSON KIRBY, who will be remembered by the elder portion of the theatre-going community in America, was playing the Countess De Liniers in "The Two Orphans" at the Theatre Royal, Leeds, Eng., prior to the destruction of that theatre by fire, as mentioned in our past issue.

J. L. HALL and Marie Longmore were playing at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Liverpool, Eng.

MISS LIZZIE WILMORE was playing at the Theatre Royal, Plymouth, Eng.

THE LAST NIGHTS of the Lydia Thompson Troupe at the Globe Theatre, London, Eng., were announced. The company shortly go on a provincial tour.

MISS EMMA THORNE, who was in America some years ago, is performing at the Criterion Theatre, London, Eng.

THE LEASE of the Charing-cross Theatre, J. S. Clarke proprietor, London, Eng., is announced for sale.

"THE TWO ORPHANS" was withdrawn from the stage of the Olympic Theatre, London, Eng., on May 23, after a very long run.

MLLE. BETTY RIGL has made a pronounced success at the Alhambra, London, Eng., where she has been dancing for the first times in England for some few weeks past. The Era of May 9, after commenting upon the mise en scene of "The Barbaric Ballet," says:

To these may now be added a new dancer, Mlle. Betty Rigl, who is perhaps the best artist in her line who has appeared amongst us since Mlle. Henriette D'Or, whose dancing in "Meda" and "Flick and Flock" will not have been forgotten. But the style of Mlle. Betty Rigl is altogether different from that of Mlle. D'Or. The one is distinguished for her "elevation," and the other for her remarkable power of "elevation." These are the two principal arts of ballet-dancing. Although the skill of "elevation" is one rarely attained, and is, of course, the more fascinating, the proficiency in "point" is not an unvaluable gift. Mlle. Betty Rigl has not all that airy and fairylike grace of the great exponents of her art; she does not possess that charm of motion or style which so completely captates the beholder. But the "tip-toe" dancing could scarcely be excelled, and the movement of the foot from the ankle downwards is the very perfection of ease and neatness. Well, indeed, did the lady deserve the rounds of applause with which her dancing was greeted. It was hearty enough when she danced with M. Jousset, the celebrated ballet master, but when she executed her step alone a hearty encore was inevitable. Such a dancer at this lady is most welcome in England, for every step may be anxiously watched. She will do for the ballet what Salvini is doing for the drama—increase its interest and elevate its tone. The leading danseuse is still most efficiently and very charmingly assisted by Mlles. Sidoni and Percoldi, who being more distinguished for "elevation" than 'point," pleasantly vary the proceedings.

MUSICAL.

OPERA IN VIENNA.—A correspondent writing on May 8 says: "It is my painful duty to record the failure of the youngest and most elegant of our theatrical establishments, the Komsche Oper, which closed on Monday last, with the conclusion of the season. The season, the various attempts made by the manager, Bohrmann, to make the theatre pay having proved unsuccessful. One of the Italian-opera performances was nearly rendered impossible in consequence of a threatened strike of the band, who refused to enter the orchestra until the Board of Directors had guaranteed them their month's salary. They were thus more fortunate than the members of the opera dramatique, who have been offered 30 per cent. of their due, but who have declined the offer, and threaten to bring an action against the Board. This did not prevent the Italian-opera performances being, in an artistic point of view, most successful, especially "Faust," where M. Capoul made a great hit, and Mme. Gerster eclipsed Madame Patti in the garden scene. Altogether, the diva's Marguerite did not quite come up to the German notion of Goethe's Gretchen. On the other hand, she was overwhelmed with applause as Dinorah, as Gilda, as Rosina, and in "Il Barbiere." The theatre has now been let to the previous management of the Theatre And der Wien, who will reopen it on the 15th of September with light opera and operetta."

CARL ROSA is to open the Princess' Theatre, London, Eng., the coming Fall, with English opera. It is said that Rose Hersee and Mr. Santley have been engaged, and that the opening opera will probably be an English version of "Le Nozze di Figaro," with Hersee as Susannah and Santley as Almaviva.

THE FIFTY-SECOND of the famous annual Rhenish musica festivals was opened on Sunday, May 16, at Dusseldorf. The number of visitors was very large. The directors of the festival are Herr Joachim, the celebrated violinist, and Herr Tausch of Dusseldorf. The orchestra was composed of 122 musicians, and the choir of 711 voices—223 sopranos, 192 contraltos, 121 tenors, and 175 basses. On the first day the "Missa Solennis," by Beethoven, was executed under the direction of Herr Joachim, and the symphony "Jupiter," by Mozart, under the direction of Herr Tausch. The violin solo of the "Benedictus" of the mass was played by Herr Cutlitz.

RUMOR SAITH that Mr. Mapleson intends coming to America with his entire Italian-opera Company in the Fall.

PATTI is singing at Covent Garden, London, Eng.

THE BENEDICT TESTIMONIAL.—The twice-deferred presentation of a testimonial to Sir Julius Benedict, in acknowledgment of his services as an artist and his worth as a private gentleman, took place on May 19 in the grand saloon of Dudley House, Park lane, London, Eng. The ceremony witnessed by a large and brilliant assemblage of ladies and gentlemen. Among these present were the Duke of Edinburgh, and others of the nobility; Adelina Patti (Marquise De Caux), Mlle. Titiens, Mlle. Enriquez, Signor Garcia, and other ladies and gentlemen devoted to the musical art. The presentation was made by the Earl of Dudley, who had returned from Italy for the purpose, and had placed his spacious mansion at the disposal of the guests, and likewise entertained them. After a speech highly eulogistic of the professional career of Sir Julius Benedict, his lordship then formally presented his testimonial, which consists of an ornamental silver table service, comprising a centre ornament, pair of candelabra, and dessert stands. The centre ornament, bearing eight branches and glass tazzas for flower decoration, is surmounted by the figure of Apollo (a copy of the celebrated statue in the Belvidere Museum), and supports on its base figures of St. Cecilia and Sappho. The inscription is as follows: "Presented to Sir Julius Benedict, Kt., at Dudley House, on the 19th of May, 1875, by a large circle of amateurs and artists—the Earl of Dudley, president—in appreciation of his labours for forty years for the advancement of art, and as a token of their esteem." On the reverse are engraved Sir Julius Benedict's arms, and the various decorations which have been conferred upon him. The candelabra, each of which carries seven candles, are designed strictly in accord with the centerpiece; they are enriched with reliefs of suitable subjects, viz., Orpheus releasing Eurydice from the infernal regions, Ulysses charmed by the Sirens, Orpheus playing to the wild animals, and Pan leading a dance of wood nymphs. The dessert service also carries out the general design, and bears figures of a musical character. Sir Julius Benedict made a speech in reply, and the Duke of Edinburgh proposed a vote of thanks, in accordance with a resolution placed in his hands, to the committee who had undertaken the management and completion of the testimonial.

MME. JUDIC had returned to Paris from Russia.

TAMBERLIK, the famous tenor, has renewed his engagement at the Oriental Theatre, Madrid, Spain.

A FULL REHEARSAL of Verdi's "Messa da Requiem" was given at Albert Hall, London, Eng., on May 12, in order to introduce Signor Verdi in person to the present generation of English musicians. The band comprised 150 of the very best players in England, and in the auditorium was gathered a crowd of the great musicians then present in London, including nearly the whole troupe of Her Majesty's Opera, the principal artists of the Covent-garden Opera, and almost every professor, artist and amateur of any note. Several public performances have since been given.

MISS BESSIE EMMET (Mrs. Richard Temple), who was formerly a member of Gunn's English-opera Company, died recently in London, Eng.

M. POLL DA SILVA, a well known song-writer, is dead.

ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S new oratorio of "David and Jonathan" will be one of the novelties of the Norwich, Eng., Musical Festival.

VARIETY HALLS.

CHEEVERS AND KENNEDY, Harry Jackson, Hugh Dougherty and Sydney Franks took part, with numerous others, in a concert given in St. James' Hall, Islington, Eng., May 17.

THE WESTON SISTERS—Flora and Jennie—and Fred Foster were performing at the South London Palace, London, Eng.

CHEEVERS AND KENNEDY, "Jolly" Nash, Lisa Weber and the Weston Sisters were performing at the London (Eng.) Pavilion.

MISS ANNIE ADAMS was at the Royal Cambridge Music Hall, London, Eng.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

THE BRYANT BENEFIT.—At the matinee benefit to have been given in London by Moore & Burgess' Minstrels to the widow and children of the late Dan Bryant the following volunteers were announced: Miss Pauline Markham, Dr. Lynn, wizard; Fred Foster (who was in America a few years ago) J. H. McDermott, the Brothers Raynor, Alex. Lumsden, the Misses L'Estelle Rosomond and Fanny Manetto.

MOORE & BURGESS' MINSTRELS gave a change of programme for the Whitsuntide holidays, which included Hughey Dougherty in a stump speech, John Pendy and Tommy Sully in a grotesque dance, etc.

THE BENEFITS RECENTLY GIVEN in Liverpool, Eng., to Sam Hague and his troupe were largely attended on both nights. The minstrels furnished the entire entertainment. Sam Hague, on being called out on the first night, announced his intention of rebuilding his burnt hall, and that during the time of its reconstruction he and his troupe would make a tour of the principal provincial towns.

CIRCUSES.

THE VETERAN JESTER WALLETT was performing with Charles Adams' Circus at Sheffield, Eng.

MISCELLANEOUS.

AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE, London, Eng., 40,030 persons were present on Whit-Monday, May 17.

AT THE ALHAMBRA PALACE, London, Eng., on Whit-Monday, May 17, says The Sunday Times, "wherever you went—whether in the central hall, the exhibition department, the conservatory, the open Italian garden, or the picture galleries—locomotion was equally troublesome. Then, in the picturesque grounds what met the eye was as lively and gay as a scene at a country fair, divested of its rough and boisterous elements. Some sought boating on the lake, others luxuriated in swings and roundabouts, others again resorted to the shooting-gallery, while still larger numbers found agreeable excitement in the dance or kiss-in-the-ring. The company's military band played in the grove, and the band of the 1st Middlesex Engineers on the north terrace, and added greatly to the morning's enjoyment. Inside the palace the programme began with performances on the organ by Mr. Archer. In the theatre 'The Elfin Tree' and the ballet of 'Minerva' were performed. But the chief event of the day was the grand concert in the central hall, under the direction of Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. Weist Hill. There was an overture from 'Zampa,' and then a selection of Moore's Irish melodies by the united bands, conducted by Mr. Dan Godfrey. A song by Mr. Edward Lloyd, 'Sweethearts,' in consequence of the buzz from the audience, could not be heard far beyond the orchestra, and Mlle. Titiens, although she exerted herself to the utmost, was still more unfortunate. The songs of Miss Edith Wynne and Mme. Antoinette Sterling from the same cause were, except to a limited circle, nearly dumb show. When the familiar figure of Mr. Sims Reeves appeared, the noise partially subsided; but, strange to say, the popular artist was scarcely heard at all even by those in his immediate vicinity. His song was 'Tom Bowling,' but it could not have fallen more flat—indeed, he seemed to have treated the attempt to reach the ears of the audience as hopeless. A grand national fantasia, by Fred Godfrey, called 'England,' and first played in Dublin at the installation of the Duke of Abercorn, was again given by the united bands. Afterwards Mr. Santley, in 'The Heart Bow'd Down,' was enabled to procure a fair hearing. The remainder of the singing was also listened to with more attention, the most successful feature being the duet 'All's well' by Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Santley, and 'Kathleen Mavourneen' by Mlle. Titiens. Towards the termination of the concert, which wound up with the National Anthem, there was a balloon ascent. The outdoor amusements included the circus, in which Hengler's company gave three performances; Edmond's (late Wombwell's) menagerie, with 500 living animals; Humphrey's performing elephants; and the athletic sports by the London Gymnastic Society. Two entertainments in the small concert-room, by Mr. George Grossmith and Mr. George Grossmith Jr., and Herr A. Frikell, a clever conjuror, were given. At nine o'clock the interior of the building was illuminated. 94,125 visitors were present.

STEPHEN MASSETT gave an entertainment at the Salle Phillippe Herz, Rue Clary, Paris, May 15, which was well attended.

LULU, gymnast, who is shot up in the air by mechanical apparatus, is to commence an engagement at the Cremorne Gardens, London, Eng., June 28.

11* RE-ENGAGED. Address 307 Sansom st., Phila.

Oddfellows' Hall, Springfield, Mo., Feb. 15, 1875.
NOLAN CHAIR CO., No. 600 Broadway, N. Y.
GENTS:—The chairs (Grand Operas) purchased of you for our new hall arrived in good condition, and were set up by our carpenter with perfect ease. Our citizens are proud of them, and we can recommend them to the public as being a perfect gem in the chair line. They cannot be surpassed for comfort, elegance or economy of room.
Yours truly, CHAS. E. DUBBS.

Coulter's Opera-house, Aurora, Ill., Feb. 15, 1875.
GENTS:—We have had two hundred and fifty of the Nolan Eureka Gallery Chairs in constant use for the past four months. They have given entire satisfaction, and there has not been a single chair or part of a chair broken during the time. I do not hesitate to pronounce them the best chair for the price that I have seen in use. Yours respectfully,
T. E. COULTER, Manager.

Ford's Opera-house, Baltimore, Nov. 21, 1874.
MR. P. W. NOLAN
MY DEAR SIR:—We substituted for the Cooper Institute pattern of tilting-seat iron chairs those manufactured under your patent, and the result has been most satisfactory in EVERY RESPECT—more comfort, more convenience, more strength and more pleasing to the eye. I esteem your chair as a most valuable aid to the proper seating of any first-class hall, theatre or opera-house. Aside from its comfort, its facility it affords the house-cleaner by the folding-up of the seat, back and arms, so compactly, is a valuable advantage. * * * In a word, the chair is decidedly of great value, by being the very best for its special purpose of any that I have seen in use. I have yet to hear of anyone's finding fault with it in any way, but everyone speaking of it uses words of praise.
Yours very respectfully, J. T. FORD.
